Soul City founder speaks at forum

McKissick: health discrimination continues

By BERNIE RANSBOTTOM Staff Writer

"We can't take health simply and put it in a pocket and separate it from the rest of society," Floyd McKissick said Wednesday in the keynote address to a locally sponsored convention. "Health is business, health is politics, and health is understanding a bureaucracy."

McKissick, president of the SoulCity Co. and founder of Soul City, spoke to approximately 300 persons at the conference, "Perspectives On the Health of Black Populations," sponsored by the Black Student Caucus and the Student Union Board of the School of Public Health.

Health is affected by all other areas of society, McKissick said, and he pointed to Soul City as a classic example of this interrelationship.

"We were serving 50 people a day in run-down trailers and just trying to put them into a permanent building and given them services, giving health services to a rural population. And what prevents health services? It became a political decision."

McKissick said that not only health, but all areas of life are controlled by politics and economics and that blacks need to become more sophisticated than they were in the 1960s to survive in this type of society.

"It's just like in the government when it comes to getting money from the SBA (Small Business Administration); you must be declared to be socially or economically deprived. And black folk got to go in there and prove that.

"All we had to do (in the '60s) was have a strong commitment, a sense of organization and a willingness to endure pain and humiliation because we were then dealing with the problem of racism as a moral problem rather than as an economic problem."

McKissick termed this new kind of racism "institutional racism", and he said that as long as racism exists, society will never be truly integrated, and minorities will remain at the bottom of the social ladder.

All the time that the civil rights movement was in progress, McKissick said, "The other part of society has slowly elevated itself upward and upward; and while we were working for

"You got to the Ford level-and that's basically where we are today. The struggle of the '60s for integration has not yet been won. If you think that the struggle is over with, then go see a psychiatrist. Health is one of many facets that we must concentrate on."

Sophomore Parmelee elected as chairperson of SCAU

By BARRY SMITH Staff Writer

Bill Parmelee, a sophomore accounting major from Raleigh, has been elected chairperson of the Student Consumer Action Union (SCAU). Parmelee began his term Monday.

SCAU also elected Ralph Aubry, a sophomore zoology-chemistry major from Raleigh, as vicechairperson. Other officers elected are Allen Graham, housing chairperson; Bob Brubaker, food quality chairperson; and Pam Mills, special projects chairperson.

Parmelee said SCAU plans to rewrite several of its publications during the next year. C*A*S*H, the consumer handbook for banking in Chapel Hill and Carrboro, will be revised and printed this summer, according to Parmelee.

C*A*S*H probably will be distributed during orientation, he said. In the past, it has been distributed in September. "By that time, most people have already decided on a bank," Parmelee said.

SCAU also plans to rewrite five other consumer handbooks during the upcoming year, Parmelee said. The Franklin Street Gourment, a guide to Chapel Hill-Carrboro restaurants and cafeterias, also will be year because of fluctuating apartment prices Parmelee said.

Southern Part of Heaven?, a survey of apartments in the area, will be revised and published in spring 1978, Parmelee said. Southern Part of Heaven?'s latest revision came out Monday but will be reprinted next and conditions.

SCAU also plans to revise the Automotive Repair Guide, the Consumer Health Handbook and the Merchants' Guide.

Student Legal Services and SCAU will work together on a legal guide for students.

Board resolution praises basketball team

A resolution of commendation to the 1976-77 Tar Heel basketball team was passed unanimously by the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen at its meeting Tuesday night.

Players, coaches, trainers and managers of the squad were praised for their successful efforts this year. The resolution also thanked the team for the manner in which they represented the University, the town of Chapel Hill and the state of North Carolina, both on and off the basketball court.

In other action, an amendment was proposed to the town's zoning ordinance for increased town-control over appearance changes of businesses in the central business district. The move for this amendment was initiated by aldermen Gerry Cohen and Robert

By mid July a letter describing the housing situation at that time will be sent to all students still on the waiting list. Those students will have a choice of remaining on the list and accepting any assignment or canceling their contracts and receiving a full prepayment refund. Spencer and Whitehead

Gibbs said students have a 50 per cent chance of getting housing if they put their names on the waiting list, but she urged students to look for alternate housing while they are still here this spring.
