"They're asking Mike O'Koren or the school to take affirmative action and to have the bumper sticker removed, and they have no legal basis for making them do this," Dietz said.

Tannen said the UNC group has consulted several legal experts who have said there are serious doubts about whether the NCAA could enforce the rule in court.

The UNC students do not have any plans to press a lawsuit because of the expense involved, the members said.

If a case involving UNC were taken to court, the University would be represented by the state attorney general's office. Deputy Atty. Gen. Andrew Vanore could not be reached for comment on the possible legal procedures which might be used if such a case developed.

Berst insists that the NCAA players have control over any use of their names or pictures which appear in commercially manufactured and sold items such as posters and bumper stickers. Opponents say that athletes are public figures who are so well known that pictures and photographs of them are part of the public domain.

But regardless of the legal questions surrounding this rule, the NCAA has considerable clout in enforcing it.

If a member school balks at the rule, the NCAA can simply say that the NCAA is a voluntary organization, and if the school does not want to abide by NCAA rules, it can leave the organization. Leaving would be impractical, however, because the NCAA dominates collegiate athletic activities.

This NCAA rule is not without opponents within the member schools. One athletic department official, who asked not to be named, said there has been some discussion at several NCAA schools about the possibility of modifying the rule at the next meeting of the NCAA Council, which interprets the rules of the NCAA.

Barnhouse speaks on family

Psychiatrist and theologian Ruth T. Barnhouse will speak at 8 p.m. today in Hamilton Hall as part of a Women Studies series entitled "The Family: Past, Present and Future."

Barnhouse has been a guest speaker at churches, universities and seminars on such topics as "Marriage and Divorce," "The Family," "Sexuality" and "Women and the Church." She is also a frequent participant in workshops and TV panels on the topic of psychiatry and religion.

Barnhouse was the first woman and layperson to be named as a Fellow of the College of Preachers. She is presently a staff psychiatrist at McLean Hospital and a clinical assistant in psychiatry at Harvard University.

She has written for a variety of journals dealing with sexuality and Christianity and has published two books. The books, which deal with human sexuality and society today, are entitled "Homosexuality: A Symbolic Confusion" and "Male and Female: Christian Approaches to Sexuality."

The fourth speaker in "The Family: Past, Present and Future" series will be anthropologist Margaret Mead. Mead will speak at 8 p.m. April 12 in Memorial Hall.

Hager speaks on multinationals

By BERNIE RANSBOTTOM

Multinational corporations can play a productive role in developing countries, but the corporations must be regulated, corporate lawyer Barry Hager said Monday in an International Affairs Colloquium speech.

Hager stressed the need for hard factual knowledge about international investment.

"There's a lot of talk about multinational corporations, but there is very little empirical knowledge lying about."

"Lack of adequate information about multinational corporations is one of the critical shortcomings in the area."

Because of this shortage of research data, Hager said, it is difficult to accurately assess the relative benefits and drawbacks experienced by an underdeveloped country as the result of allowing international investment within its borders.

The main ways in which multinational corporations benefit underdeveloped countries are by employing and training citizens of the country, generating foreign exchange, undertaking construction projects for which the underdeveloped country lacks the technology and generating tax revenue for the government of the underdeveloped country, Hager said.

Without regulatory aid from such agencies as the Internal Revenue Service and the Environmental Protection Agency, however, Hager said, underdeveloped countries will have a difficult time making sure that they are collecting all the taxes multinational corporations owe them and that these corporations are providing the proper environmental safeguards.

Hager is a graduate of UNC and Harvard Law School and has been a Washington correspondent for Time magazine and a freelance writer for the Congressional Quarterly.

A spokesperson for the employees said a major complaint of the group was related to management's treatment of accidents.

The spokesperson maintained that even though a bus driver involved in an accident may not be charged by the police, the Transportation Department still may decide it was preventable, and action against the driver may ensue.

Bartosiewicz confirmed that preventable accidents are registered on the driver's record. He said that the driver may appeal the decision if he desires.

Bartosiewicz said that he had not seen the letter, which predicted that worker morale and quality of town service will suffer if the layoff policy is not changed.

The Student Council for Exceptional Children of UNC will sponsor FUN DAY on Saturday, April 30th, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

This day will consist of pairing college student volunteers with handicapped and non-handicapped children for a day of fun, games, lunch, and entertainment of the Father-Son Picnic variety.

It is our hope that this day provides students with genuinely reliable information about children, information that will be needed in order to make future decisions concerning children and handicapped children and adults.

It would also be a time to provide children of this area with a special day of fun—and college student volunteers could effectively model the acceptance of others with different needs.

If you or your organization has an interest, drop by Room 010 Peabody Hall on Tuesday, April 5th anytime between the hours of 2 p.m. and 8 p.m.

If you are unable to come by drop your name, address, and phone number in campus mail addressed to:
