Aldermen's allotment of money for Carrboro route gets leaders' approval

By JEFF COLLINS Staff Writer

Student leaders, University officials and Chapel Hill Mayor James C. Wallace were among those who expressed approval Tuesday of the Carrboro board of aldermen's decision to appropriate $13,500 for extension of the Chapel Hill bus system to include service to Carrboro.

The bus-service extension was approved by a 4-2 vote at a special meeting of the board Monday called by Mayor Ruth West.

"I think it (the decision) is great," Student Body President Bill Moss said. "The bus system was originally supposed to be a joint venture between Carrboro, Chapel Hill and the University anyway, but Carrboro pulled out."

"I think the three bus referenda failed because the service proposed was too large," Moss said. "Now the (Carrboro) aldermen are saying they can bring in a limited service at a reasonable price, since the University is to help pay the costs."

Student Transportation Director Paul Arne echoed Moss' satisfaction with the Carrboro decision and added, "The fear that too many cars will register for parking permits should be eliminated."

Also expressing contentment with the decision was Chapel Hill Mayor James C. Wallace. "Myself, the town manager and the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen are in favor of extending the bus service to Carrboro, and we're glad we finally found a way to work it out," Wallace said.

Claiborne Jones, vice chancellor for business and finance at the University, stressed the fact that the bus service extension is "a nine-month experiment."

"There is no commitment beyond the next academic year, either by the University or by Carrboro," Jones said. He added that the service will be continued, however, if it proves to be a necessity.

"The key now is participation," Carrboro Alderman Ernest Patterson said. "If the buses run full, more buses can be put on the route," he added.

The buses are not only going to pick up students, they're going to go through lower-income areas, through black areas and other areas to provide service to people who work at the University.

"The President is talking about energy conservation, and a lot of people are paying lip-service, but we've got to make some strong commitments. This is a commitment, but one in which nobody really sacrifices. Carrboro spends over $100,000 a year on street maintenance. The cost of running the buses ($13,500) is insignificant by comparison."

Potentially 20 to 30 percent of Carrboro's populace could be directly served by the buses, but the entire town will benefit from them, Patterson said.

"Some of those people who stand and shout about students would not have jobs here if it were not for those students."

UNC students win Fulbright

Three UNC students have been awarded Fulbright-Hays Scholarships in history and foreign language for study abroad next year.

The recipients are John D. Watson, Jr., a history major; Porter P. Conerly, a graduate student in Spanish; and David L. Owens, a graduate student in German.

Under the Fulbright-Hays Act of 1961, grants are made annually to approximately 2,500 U.S. citizens to go abroad and to 6,000 foreign nationals to come here. The program's purpose is to increase mutual understanding between countries by means of educational and cultural exchange.

Preliminary winners are selected by the International Institute of Education in New York and are then approved by the government of their respective countries.

Watson, a senior from Greensboro, will go to West Germany for advanced study in art history. He is a member of The Grail and the Golden Fleece and last year was editor of the Carolina Course Review. He plans to attend law school after his year of study.

Conerly will enroll at the University of Seville in Spain for advanced study in Spanish. He also will be paid by the Spanish government to teach English.

Owens will work on his doctoral dissertation in Hamburg, West Germany, in conjunction with the German Academic Exchange Program.
