Woodland Avenue, Glenburnie, Ledge Lane, Hooper Lane, Boundary Street and North Street.

A survey conducted within the area revealed that the total 1,200 cars parked on these streets during the day drops to 600 at night.

The study lists several ways displaced users may be accommodated. University officials estimate campus parking lots could absorb 200 to 400 student cars next year. Chapel Hill and Carrboro buses can accommodate some of the parkers.

The town of Chapel Hill has submitted special legislation to the North Carolina General Assembly to enable the town to issue special parking permits to residents of a street where parking has been prohibited.

The plan would be phased in this summer beginning with the removal of about 300 parking spaces. The impact of this removal would be studied in the fall, and additional parking would be removed during Christmas break if vacancies still exist in University parking lots.

Removal on remaining streets would coincide with the completion of a new University storage lot, possibly located at the intersection of Manning Dr. and 15-501 By pass.

The Transportation Board did not discuss the plan at its meeting. Chairperson Terry Lathrop said he would appoint two or three of the board members to a joint Transportation-Planning Board subcommittee to study the plan.
