Seminar on UNC's history may continue

By ROBERT THOMASON Staff Writer

A UNC history course offered for the first time this semester at the request of students may be offered again if enough students express an interest, the course's professor said.

The course, a History 90 seminar, deals with the history of the University. It originated when approximately 25 persons submitted a petition to the chairperson of the history department, according to William S. Powell, former curator of the North Carolina Collection and the course's instructor.

"Although I am not seeing the course, if enough students are interested I'm willing to teach it again," Powell said.

"The course started with a look at the University's history in general," Powell said. "We went to the North Carolina Collection and went through the University's archives. We also went on a walking tour of the campus with John Allcott (professor emeritus of art and a scholar of local architecture)."

As a conclusion to the work for the second half of the semester, papers written for the seminar will be read this week in the Dialectic-Philanthropic Room on the third floor of New West. The presentations will be made at 2 p.m. today and Wednesday.

Powell said his students' research has pointed out that some past students who were expelled from the University later filled important positions. Once a student was expelled for shooting at a faculty member and another for throwing rocks at a faculty member, Powell said. These two later served as speaker of the North Carolina House of Representatives, minister to Spain and trustee to the University. Another student expelled after being accused of stealing money later became a U.S. Senator from Missouri.

"I'm pleased with the work the students have done," Powell said. "There has been some good research from original material."

Freshman killed in car accident

Russell "Skip" Cowell, a 19-year-old freshman from Silver Spring, Md., died Thursday from injuries sustained in a single-car accident near Kinston.

Graveside services were held Friday in Chapel Hill.

Cowell was driving to a relative's funeral when the accident occurred. According to a Highway Patrol spokesperson, the student was traveling south on N.C. 256, six miles south of Kinston, when his car ran off the right side of the road. The car then crossed the road, and struck a large tile at the end of a driveway. Cowell died later in the day at Pitt Memorial Hospital in Greenville.

To salute South African fight for freedom

BSM to hold 'Day of Solidarity'

The Black Student Movement (BSM) and the Revolutionary Student Brigade will sponsor "A Day of Solidarity for Freedom in Southern Africa" from 11:30 to 1:30 today in the Pit.

The program will consist of speakers and cultural presentations. Speakers will include Ann Dunbar, director of the African Studies Program; a member of the BSM; a national coordinator of the African Liberation Day Coalition; and a representative of the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

The Ebony Readers will present a performance, and the art work of Deborah Bryant will be displayed. "What we intend to do is salute the struggle for freedom in South Africa," said Deniz Daye, a BSM spokesperson. "We also hope that the day will be a catalyst for student support for a major march in Washington, D.C., on May 28."

Another rally is planned for Wednesday at UNC at Greensboro, said Judy Lang of the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

liberal past its reputation spoke of. "In 1954 professors here at UNC had the gall to claim that the Lumbees were not Indians," Jones said. "As Indians we've had to scratch and fight to enter educational institutions in this state."

"There are 44,000 Indians in North Carolina, which makes them 1 per cent of the state's population," Jones said. "North Carolina still has the largest population of Indians east of the Mississippi. Forty per cent of them are under poverty level."

Jones said the eastern North Carolina tribes are recognized by the federal government in name only, and they do not qualify for aid from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

"I see property rights, energy policy, pollution laws and the right of living wages as fundamental needs of Indians," Jones said.

The N.C. Commission on Indian Affairs has worked to rehabilitate homes, increase rent subsidies, mortgage assistance and home-building funds. Labor problems have been attacked by training programs and public service employment, Jones said.

The General Assembly in 1971 gave $12,500 for the establishment of the commission. "That was not nearly enough, but at first it was more important to get a commission," Jones said.

"One and one-half million dollars comes in now from the federal government for Indians in North Carolina," Jones said.

"Health-care problems are very severe," Jones said. "The federal administration set-up does not deal effectively with off-reservation Indians. We need to make a bigger pie instead of trying to split it more ways."

American Indians have been notorious for being unable to cooperate with themselves on economic matters, Jones said. "That's the one thing that's always caused problems for us," he said.

web of federal regulations, reports and controls which have caused educators across the country to warn that the very existence of independent education in the United States is being threatened," Helms said in a 42-page statement accompanying the legislation.

"By far the greatest cause of this flood of federal regulations affecting higher education is the social engineering of federal bureaucrats," he said.

"And by far, the greatest mechanism to implement these regulations has been the use of affirmative action quotas and goals."

Helms said the affirmative action interpretation being used by the government is "fundamentally opposed to the equal opportunity" concept in the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

"Affirmative action is, in reality, affirmative discrimination," he said. "The inevitable result of affirmative action implementation within the academic community has been the creation of a system of reverse discrimination."

If enacted, Helms' bill would require a federal agency to develop an "education impact assessment statement" along with any new regulation. The statement would estimate the cost and time involved in complying with the measure's guidelines.
