Student tutors help local school children

BY MIKE WADE
Staff Writer

Editor's note: The following is the second of two stories dealing with community programs sponsored by the UNC YM-YWCA.

Children in Chapel Hill area elementary and junior high schools who have problems with math, reading and other subjects can get help from UNC students through a tutoring program sponsored by the UNC YM-YWCA.

Approximately 80 UNC student volunteers have been visiting the schools this year to work with students in the first through ninth grades, usually on a one-to-one basis. Most of the tutoring is done during the regular school day, although a small group of volunteers also tutor children after school. The program is operated through the schools' guidance departments.

Thomas Mayo, Sharon Palsha and Betsy Blackwell direct the program.

Volunteers tutor in all subject areas, but most problems are in the areas of math and reading, Blackwell said.

Blackwell said the tutoring itself is only a small part of the program's value for the children. "The most important thing (for the students) is the personal contact — feeling that somebody really cares about them, and feeling that someone is concerned," she said.

Blackwell said a student who needs a tutor is supposed to ask for rather than automatically being assigned a volunteer.

Blackwell said "frustrating" is the best one-word description of the volunteers' tutoring experiences. Tangible progress is slow and often difficult to discern in the children, she said.

The most common method for tutoring students who have academic problems, especially at the junior-high level, is a return to basics. Volunteers also learn teaching methods in workshops in which they share teaching ideas.

The tutoring program was started in the early '60s by the YM-YWCA and concerned area parents. High schools have participated in the program in the past but were dropped because the high school students didn't benefit as much from the program.

Recreation area open for membership

By TOM WATKINS
Staff Writer

Memberships for the new camping season are now being accepted for a recreation area operated by the University at Kerr Lake.

The UNC Kerr Lake Recreation Association is offering membership in the 230-acre Kerr Lake Recreation Area to faculty, staff and full-time students of UNC and employees of North Carolina Memorial Hospital and the UNC General Administration.

The recreation area is located north of Henderson, approximately 65 miles northeast of Chapel Hill. The facility features approximately 50 campsites, two large picnic shelters, boat sheds, a concrete boat-launching ramp and a boat dock.

"This is a particularly attractive area, well-suited for family camping, swimming, fishing, boating and water skiing," said

Frederic W. Schroeder Jr., associate dean of student affairs and chairperson of the Kerr Lake Committee, the administrative board of the recreation area.

The association was formed in March 1976 to help the recreation area become self-supporting. Faculty and staff members pay $15 annually to join the association, and students pay $5.

In addition, fees are charged according to how much a member uses the area. A family or student may pay an annual unlimited-use fee of $25, an annual reserved-site fee of $85 for a specified site or a daily-use fee of $1 per adult or $3 per family.

Adult guests must pay an additional daily guest-use fee of $1 per adult or $3 per family, or members may purchase an annual unlimited-guest permit for $25.

UNC operates the facility under a 25-year license from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The association presently has 101 faculty and staff members and 26 student members.

Women's broadcasting club alters name

College Women in Broadcasting has changed its name to College Students in Broadcasting (CSB) in compliance with a request from its national parent organization, American Women in Radio and Television.

"They (the national organization) decided to change the name because a lot of chapters were having trouble with discrimination in their bylaws," said Karen Oates, president of the UNC chapter.

Oates said that the UNC chapter changed its bylaws last year to comply with antidiscrimination regulations. "It was just a matter of changing our name.

"We do want male members," Oates said. "We've had some very active male members this year, but there's sort of a stigma attached to a person who joins what is known as a women's group."

"We want to stress that it is a media organization for everyone," Oates said.

CSB has two workshop committees that give members experience handling and operating radio and video equipment. The organization sponsored a job panel in March with representatives from WRAL, WPTF and WSOC. "They came in to talk about job opportunities and how to get into the industry," Oates said.

CSB also sponsored the Federal Communications Commission broadcast license tests administered on campus. It conducted workshops and distributed study materials before the tests.

CSB is funded by membership dues and some monies from its parent organization. It receives no money from Student Government.

Swiss police bust bankers in $100 million scandal

ZURICH, Switzerland (UPI)—Swiss police arrested three bankers Monday on suspicion of illegally investing trust funds in Italian companies and losing nearly $100 million in one of the biggest banking scandals in the nation's history.

The three men, who ran the Credit Bank's branch at Chiasso on the Swiss-Italian border, were placed in investigative custody by the chief regional prosecutor.

The Credit Bank is Switzerland's third largest commercial bank, and the estimated loss would be one of the highest ever by a Swiss bank, topping that of $92 million by the Lugano branch of Lloyds Bank two years ago.

The bank's headquarters in Zurich said, "The criminal practices of the management of the Chiasso branch" included "the issue of nonregistered guarantees for misdirected trust account funds."

It said the funds, which were not shown on the books, were channeled to the Texon Financial Company in Vaduz, Liechtenstein, which allegedly used the money to buy interest in three Italian companies—Winefood, Albarella-Mare and Ampaglas.

Based on statements issued by the bank, it appears the Chiasso managers began using bank letterheads about three years ago to conduct their transactions, which were not entered onto the books. The allegedly illegal investments increased as losses piled up.

Banking sources said the money originated from large Italian investors with trust accounts at the Chiasso branch.

In an apparent move to reassure customers, the Credit Bank pointed out its "undisclosed reserves and provisions substantially exceed even the maximum potential loss" and noted its profits had climbed recently.

Bank officials also said that while they were not obliged to make good the loss they would do so "in order to maintain our reputation."

The Swiss prosecutor identified the suspects were Ernst Kührmeier, Claudio Laffranchi and Meinrad Perler.

In cases of mismanagement of funds, violators can be charged with disloyal management, an extremely serious charge in Switzerland where banking secrecy is considered inviolate.

1978 Carolina Symposium to choose topic, directors

The topic and director of the 1978 Carolina Symposium will be chosen Thursday and Friday by a special student-faculty panel. Any student with a topic proposal should contact Dean of Student Affairs Donald Boulton at 933-5597 by Wednesday.

Proposals should include topic explanations, participant and program possibilities, and estimations of funding sources and levels. They should be ready for presentation by Thursday.

The Carolina Symposium is a biennial event that alternates with the Fine Arts Festival, which was held this year. It investigates through distinguished speakers, panel discussions and exhibitions, topics of interest to the University community and the surrounding area.

The symposium draws on local as well as national resources in planning programs. Various student groups, Student Government, the University Administration and other sources contribute to the program.

Gay group's appeal rejected

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Supreme Court Monday rejected a claim by a homosexual organization that a student newspaper at Mississippi State University was constitutionally required to print its advertisement for gay counseling services.

The justices, in a brief order without comment, let stand a 3-1 decision by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans holding that the student editor had a constitutional right to reject the ad, especially since sodomy is illegal in the state.

The Mississippi Gay Alliance and its president, Anne Debarry, offered a paid ad for publication in "The Reflector" in August, 1973. Editor Bill Goudelock refused to print either the ad or a subsequent nonpaid notice.

The alliance and Debarry sued Goudelock, the newspaper's faculty adviser and university officials. They claimed the newspaper was state-supported and refusal to publish the ad was an infringement by the state of First Amendment free speech rights.

In rejecting the contention, the lower court noted that the newspaper is financially supported by student activities fees and that Goudelock was selected editor by the students, not the university.
