No, Deep Jonah is not that whale, but a thriving business that attracts students and performers to the dark depths of the Carolina Union for some of the best music around. Joe Horacek, who started the coffeehouse, spoke to Libby Lewis about the business. Her feature is on page 16.

News BUS SYSTEM

The Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen wants the University to contribute more funds to the bus system next year. Vice Chancellor Claiborne Jones said the University has a prior need for more parking space on campus. Alderman Ed Vickery asked the University for more funds in a letter published this week in the Chapel Hill Newspaper. Student Government transportation director Paul Arne agrees with Vickery's plan to ask for more money from the University. The report on the controversy is on page 4.

DEATH PENALTY

Tar Heel staff writer Stephen Harris examines the recent General Assembly passage of the death penalty in North Carolina. Now, more trials will help decrease the present overcrowded conditions on death row in which North Carolina leads the country. The debate over the reinstatement of the death penalty continues to rage between legislators. Rep. Patricia Hunt of Orange County opposed the measure by saying that men are trying to play God in deciding who gets to live and who doesn't. Harris's dispatch is on page 6.
