

1890 jocks, docs play on fields, hide in woods

This picture of a first-year anatomy class (left) was taken in 1890. UNC's first Medical School was established in 1879, and students and teachers used obscure parts of the campus to conduct laboratory work. This class is using a spot just across what was then the boundary of the University and what is now the sidewalk in front of Wilson Library between Bingham and Dey halls. Experiments were conducted in these far-removed areas to keep away curious onlookers. Pictured on the right is the 1890 football team. The University of North Carolina fielded its first intercollegiate football team in 1888, and the first game was apparently against now-Atlantic Coast Conference foe Wake Forest. Wake Forest won.

Turn of the century has women, Nellie Bly

At the turn of the century the chief mode of transportation was the horse and carriage (right). Riding here is Thomas Dunstan, a barber in Chapel Hill. Dunstan cut the hair of many students and was the self-proclaimed "Professor of Tonsorial Art." In addition to cutting hair, Dunstan operated fish traps jointly with others in the community. Between 1875 and 1900, he provided moving and cargo service with his horse, Nellie Bly. When the University started to admit women in the 1890s, the male student body took exception. In the Yackety Yack's 1906 and 1907 editions, its male editors used cartoons to show their feelings (far right).

Wilson Library's dunce cap one of Morehead's gifts

An early morning shot of Polk Place in 1936. Taken from South Building, the picture shows Wilson Library and the top of the Bell Tower. Legend has it that when the new University library was constructed in 1929, University benefactor John Motley Morehead (insert) was taken aback because the new structure was not named for him. However, in 1930, Morehead and Rufus Lenoir Patterson built and donated the Bell Tower to the University. Morehead had the tower constructed in such a way that the pointed top of the Bell Tower would appear above the rotunda roof of the library in the form of a dunce cap. Among Morehead's other gifts to the University are the Morehead Planetarium and the original $17 million of the Morehead Scholarship Foundation.
