Plus-and-minus scale: trial results not recorded

By MEREDITH CREWS
Staff Writer

A plus-and-minus grading system was implemented last semester for a two-year trial period, but no one has kept records of the number of professors voluntarily using the new system, faculty and records officials said this week.

Apparently, everyone thought someone else was checking on the situation.

"I am not certain of the number of professors actually using the pluses and minuses," said E. Maynard Adams, faculty chairperson. "A way to gather this information must be found to see how well the grading system works."

Raymond Strong, director of records and registration, said he thought a committee was to make a list of professors using the grading method as part of an evaluation. When asked if his department was to keep records of professors using pluses and minuses in the future, Strong said, "I don't know, I just don't know."

Mark Appelbaum, an associate professor in the psychology department and a member of the Educational Policy Committee, which will review the new grading system, said the committee has not met to discuss the subject and he does not know who is supposed to keep the statistics.

The two-year trial period for the plus-and-minus grading system, adopted in April 1976, is to be evaluated in the spring semester of 1979. Pluses and minuses presently do not affect quality point averages and are recorded only on transcripts. But if the Educational Policy Committee decides pluses and minuses should affect quality point averages, an A-minus would equal 3.7, a B-plus would be 3.3, a B-minus would be 2.7 and so on to grade D.

James R. Leutze, an associate professor in the history department, strongly supported the plus-and-minus grading system when it was debated in 1976. "I'm surprised the records office does not have figures on how many professors used the plus-and-minus system," he said.

"I assumed someone was doing it, because the evaluation is based on how many professors actually use the grading system."

But Donald Jicha, associate dean of the General College, said, "I don't think the number of professors using the plus and minus system will be recorded until the end of the year. But I would say most professors used pluses and minuses last semester."

By AMY McRARY
Staff Writer

ECOS will sponsor bikefests on Sept. 11 in Chapel Hill and Sept. 18 in Durham to raise money for the construction of the N.C. Environmental Education Center.

The center will be an illustration of the state group's concern for the environment. ECOS President Larry Kehrer says.

Construction is set to begin within six months to a year, Kehrer says. The center, to be located in rural Chatham County, will be built of recycled material to demonstrate how to conserve natural resources, he says.

A bikefest is like a bike-a-thon, with one exception. People participating in a bike-a-thon are required to get contributions for the miles they ride. In a bikefest, contributions are not mandatory but are suggested.

Open to the public, the proposed center will have a garden grown with natural fertilizers, a compost pile, water wells, a library, and a research center.

"In a way this will be a farm, for the people living here will try to live off things normally thrown away," Kehrer says. "But it will also be a living demonstration of a self-sufficient place to live: a demonstration of systems and technology which enhance the environment as well as the quality of life."

Ten ECOS employees will build the center. They will work 20 hours a week at the center.

building the structures, working in the garden, and guiding public tours of the center's 50 acres. In exchange, they will receive room, food and $10 spending money. Working only 20 hours a week will give the workers an opportunity to find other part-time jobs, Kehrer says.

The project is an attempt by ECOS to change its image, Kehrer says. "Our membership has dwindled and environmentalists are seen as negative, telling people what they can't do. This is an attempt by us to show meaningful ways of solving the environmental problems we have today."

Construction of the center will cost between $80,000 and $100,000, Kehrer says. The cost for the 50 acres ECOS hopes to buy in Chatham County will be approximately $50,000.

Chapel Hill, UNC enter stage three of five-stage water conservation plan

Chapel Hill and the University are in stage three of a five-stage mandatory water conservation plan. It is illegal to water vegetable gardens, shrubbery and flowers except between 4 and 8 p.m. on Saturdays under the restrictions. Lawn-watering is prohibited, and water flow in swimming pools must be reduced to the minimum amount required for maintaining operations.

Washing motor vehicles, including the use of commercial car washes, is prohibited. Water may not be used to wash outside areas such as patios, sidewalks and driveways or for decorative fountains, pools and ponds. Restaurants may serve water only on request. Water-cooled air conditioners and other equipment that do not recycle water may not be used unless necessary for health and safety.

Violations of the ordinance will result in a misdemeanor charge punishable by a $50 fine or a 30-day prison term, or both.

Officials declared a stage-three emergency when the level of University Lake, Chapel Hill's only reservoir, dropped to 72 inches below its normal level.

If the lake drops to 96 inches below normal, tighter stage-four restrictions will be enforced. Stage five, the crisis stage, will go into effect if University Lake falls to 132 inches below normal.

In addition to stage-three restrictions, students and area residents are urged to practice the following voluntary measures:

- Take showers instead of tub baths and limit them to four minutes.
- Reuse household water for watering house plants. Biodegradable soaps, detergents and shampoos will not harm plants.
- Do not let taps run while shaving, brushing teeth or rinsing dishes.
- Limit use of washing machines and dishwashers.

Monday's water consumption
4,691 million gallons from University Lake
1,047 million gallons from Durham
3,644 million gallons Level of University Lake
78 inches below capacity
Water consumed on Aug. 29, 1976
4.3 million gallons

South Africa: nuclear use our own choice

DURBAN, South Africa (UPI) — South Africa said Tuesday it "will jolly well" use its nuclear potential for other than peaceful purposes if it wants and that no one "will tell us what we should do."

Finance Minister Owen Horwood told the annual congress of the ruling National Party that President Carter is not "free to dictate to us" and cannot "lay down the law to everyone else."

Almost immediately after Horwood's speech, South African foreign minister Roelof "Pik" Botha issued a statement reiterating that the South African government supported the "ideal" that nuclear energy should only be used for peaceful purposes.

Horwood referred to charges by both the Soviet Union and France last week that South Africa was preparing a nuclear test in the Kalahari desert.

Despite denials by South African premier John Vorster, U.S. officials in Washington said over the weekend that the United States had confirmed the reports and that Carter had cooperated with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev to halt such a test.

In his speech to the National Party, Horwood said: "It is time we told Mr. Carter and a few other people that if we did at any time wish to do other things with our nuclear potential, we will jolly well do so according to our own decision and our own judgment."

"President Carter does not ask us when he wants to do anything," Horwood said. "If he thinks he is free to dictate to us, then he is simply saying 'Might is Right' and that he can prescribe moral norms and lay down the law to everyone else because he is the head of a great country of 225 million people."

"South Africa is a sovereign country," Horwood said. "And we have demonstrated to the world under pressure of sustained attack such as no country has had to withstand, a restraint and sense of responsibility of which we can be proud."

Shortly after Horwood's speech, Botha issued a statement from his office in Pretoria affirming that the South African government still supported "the ideal" that nuclear energy be used solely for peaceful purposes.

Two assaulted near stadium

Two UNC students were attacked by four unidentified males near the Kenan Field House parking lot Saturday night, University Police reported. The attackers fled in red sedan.

Frank Taylor of 711 Morrison and Vance Holloman of 1025 Morrison told police they were walking on the path between Stadium Drive and Morrison Dorm at 11:03 Saturday when four men approached them and asked if they wanted to fight.

One of the suspects struck Holloman and took his Carolina baseball cap. The attackers fled in a 1965 or 1966 red sedan with black trim.

Police also reported a rash of wallet and pocketbook thefts from campus recreation areas over the weekend. Seven wallets valued at almost $600 were reported missing from Woollen Gym, Carmichael Auditorium and Fetzer Field.

Police have no suspects in any of the cases, but it is believed all seven thefts were committed by one or two persons. Most of the seven thefts occurred between 4 and 8 p.m. Saturday.
