an important part in the success of the Wildcat offense Saturday afternoon.

Carolina should have an edge if the game is decided by the kicking game. Kentucky's kicking game is suspect because of inexperience. Two senior walk-ons will be punter and place-kicker, but neither have had any varsity starting experience at those positions. Carolina has place-kicker Tom Biddle who kicked a school record of 13 field goals last season, and punter Johnny Elam.

Players on the Kentucky team might be somewhat lackadaisical as they approach the rematch against Carolina because of the easy time they had against the Tar Heels on that freezing December day in Atlanta.

"I said before the Peach Bowl that the winner would be at a disadvantage," Kentucky coach Fran Curci said this week. "That's just the way kids are. But our preparation has been the same as it would be for any opener. We're concerned with what our team will do. I can see fumbles, missed field goals and penalties."

Curci said he plans to run an offense which Carolina fans should recognize immediately: a ground game with a strong running attack.

"Sometimes he (UNC coach Bill Dooley) gets criticized for it," Curci said of the Carolina ground attack. "But it's the type of football that pays off for you in the long haul."

Curci said that if momentum has anything to do with the outcome of the game, the final score could be noticeably different than in the Peach Bowl. He said Kentucky got some breaks in that game which affected the outcome, such as an early Carolina touchdown that was called back because a player lined up offside.

"This one is going to come down to something like that because mistakes certainly can change the outlook," he said.

A capacity crowd of nearly 58,000 is expected for the game Saturday, with the kickoff at 1:30 p.m. Carolina's team will fly to Kentucky early this afternoon and will have light practice at Commonwealth Stadium later today.

Heels' strength this year, although he feels there is also great potential in both the line and the defense.

The schedule will be even tougher than last year with the addition of Appalachian State and Rollins, both of which are usually nationally-ranked teams, and small-college power Campbell. In addition, in Dorrance's estimation, the Atlantic Coast Conference teams get better all the time, so the conference competition will be fierce. Perennial powerhouse Clemson could be even better than last year, when it finished fourth in the country.

"They should have been national champions with the talent that they had," Dorrance said. "This season I don't think they're going to be much weaker. It would take an incredible upset to beat them, although that's certainly one of our goals."

Last year the Heels were 9-5, but stumbled in their last three games.

"We came into those last three games with a fantastic year, because we had just upset Maryland and we had already negotiated a bid out of that win to the national tournament. All we had to do in our remaining games was tie or beat Duke and State, and we would have had our bid. We went into the Duke game and outshot them 36-2 and lost 1-0. That loss shattered our morals.

"We went down to Clemson with a shattered morale playing against a team that was out to destroy us, and they did destroy us (8-0). And because of those two very embarrassing losses, we went into the N.C. State game not exactly up, and we lost in overtime.

"The trouble with the ACC in terms of a soccer conference is that there are only six teams; you lose one or two games and that puts you in the cellar. It would be much better if it were a home and away series or if we played a tournament at the end that contributed to our standings, rather than this basically Russian-roulette system of ACC standings.

"We're a stronger team than last year. I think we'll be winning a lot more games. I think morale is good. But in terms of predictions, it's really difficult in our game. Give me a 42-game season, and I'll tell you where we'll finish. But give me a five-game season, and I can't tell you if we'll finish first or last."

Students will be admitted to Saturday's game with their I.D. card. Admission for others is $2 and children with Rainbow soccer shirts will be admitted for $1.
