

Heel volleyballers triumph

In what could be called nothing but a dull match, the UNC women's volleyball team beat Louisburg Tuesday night in Carmichael Auditorium 15-9, 15-10, 15-4.

The Tar Heels were never behind in the match. Louisburg was able to put together a substantial comeback in the first and second games, but these comebacks were not enough to close the gap.

The third game ran in much the same vein as the previous two. The Tar Heels suffered from the outset and Louisburg served a rash of poor serving.

Jane Foley served five straight points to put the team ahead 14-4 but lost her serve. The serve then changed hands six times until a Jackie Kimbro spike brought it to Carolina.

Kimbro served the final point, which was not returned by Louisburg.

Coach Beth Miller was pleased with Carolina's play. "We played well and took advantage of a good opportunity," she said.

"I thought everybody had some good plays, so we played well individually and as a team. Our play was especially good at the net," she said.

Carolyn Hawkins, a senior playing her last home game (as were Donna Gutterman and Ruth Heruska, who was sidelined with an injury), said she thought Louisburg was not up to par Tuesday night. "I thought Louisburg was nervous," she said. "We've played them before, and I know they can play better than they showed tonight."

Senior seeks comeback

Bill Buttner shoulders burden of injury

By DAVID McNEILL
Staff Writer

For the last month and a half, Bill Buttner has been playing the waiting game. And he will be the first to tell you that he would rather be playing golf.

While his Carolina teammates are playing in the fall tournaments, Buttner, an all-ACC selection a year ago has been nursing a sore shoulder which he injured during a qualifying round at Finley Golf Course in early September. The Plymouth, Mass., senior tore a muscle on his right side behind the shoulder blade, and the muscle stretches and causes pain on the follow-through of his swing.

"My shoulder is still very sore," Buttner said. "It is taking a long time to heal. It improved a lot the first few weeks, but the doctor keeps saying I should take another week off. It's been nearly seven weeks and I'm getting a little impatient. The team has three tournaments left this fall, and I would like to play in the last two."

Following those three tournaments, UNC will take a break from competition during the winter. The spring is the most important part of the year for college golfers, but the fall offers the players the opportunity to work on their games and gain valuable experience.

"Although we hope to be playing our best in the spring," Buttner said, "the fall season is valuable also as we face some strong competition in the big fall tournaments. I haven't played any golf in six and a half weeks. It can sometimes be helpful to take a break from the game for a little while, but certainly not this long."

"I would like to be getting my game ready for spring, and now would be the time to be working on it. We hope to have a team meeting soon to decide what our weaknesses are so we can work on them to the point where we won't be afraid of any shot we face. That is what golf is all about—limiting your fears. If you can do that, you'll be in great shape."

Heels in action

Carolina's men's golf team is in Orlando, Fla., today to begin play in the Cypress Gardens Invitational. The tournament runs through Sunday.

12th in the nation, the Heels look to be very strong again this time around.

"I think we have the potential to top what we did last year," Buttner said. "We have so much depth this year. We can dig down in the barrel to our seventh, eighth and ninth man and get someone to help us. Steve Smith is a good example of this. He was playing on our second team at the Duke tournament and he went out and beat everybody.

"We have five freshmen—Frank Fuhrer, Eric Lawhon, Jim Taylor, Jerry Stanislaw and Matt Sughrue—who have all been playing very well this fall. They have given us spirit, and they are ready to win every time they tee it up. They have a lack of fear. I hope it will rub off on the rest of us. The competition for starting positions will keep everyone from being lazy."

That decision will rest on the shoulders of UNC golf coach Devon Brouse. Of course, having too many good players is a problem that most coaches would love to have. Yet, regardless of the fine depth present, Brouse wants a healthy Buttner this spring.

"Bill Buttner is very important to our team," Brouse said. "He gives us a lot of stability, and he is a very consistent player. He got an invitation to play in the Sun Bowl Tournament in December, and we hope he will be able to participate in it. He is a fine individual, and he provides a good deal of leadership for the team."

"I think the seniors should be putting on the show for the younger guys on the team concerning the idea of the proper way of handling yourself on and off the course," Buttner said. "It is important for us to assume the role of being the leader type, and we also need to concentrate on playing consistently."

Many of the top golfers in the nation begin pondering the thought of turning professional and playing for the big money while they are still in college. But Buttner is not concerned with that right now. He is too busy looking forward to his final year as a Carolina golfer.

"I haven't thought about turning pro yet. I just want to get this team to the NCAA tournament. We want to go into every tournament with the idea of winning, and we will be aiming towards winning the ACC championship once again."

"I am hoping to play even better than last year, despite this shoulder injury. I would like to be the most consistent player on the team—the one you can depend on. I think everyone on our squad should try to do this!"

Hockey looks for redemption against Deacons

By ISABEL WORTHY
Staff Writer

The Wake Forest field hockey team could be in for some trouble this afternoon when it meets the Tar Heels at 3 p.m. on James Field.

For starters, Wake doesn't have the reputation in hockey that many of the teams Carolina has played (and beaten) have had this season. To make matters worse for Wake, the Tar Heel coaches were not exactly pleased with Carolina's 1-0 win over Duke Tuesday and expect their players to redeem themselves against the Deacs.

Though Head Coach Dolly Hunter admitted that the Deacs "aren't as strong as most of the teams we've been playing lately," she emphasized that they will "definitely be a challenge." She added that Wake has a knowledgeable coach and that Wake will be well conditioned when it meets UNC.

But Wake Forest won't catch the Heels napping as Duke nearly did, according to Hunter. "We plan to play a much faster game," she said. "The defense is going to come forward more and act offensively."

"In today's (Wednesday's) practice we're going to improve our stickwork. We're going to improve our strategy too—how and where we move on the field, our passing and our push-ins."

According to Hunter, the Heels will need the increased movement and offense to score on Wake Forest because "they have a great goalie from Philadelphia, and many of their other players are Northerners."

After the varsity beat Duke Tuesday, the Carolina junior varsity tied Duke 1-1. UNC's score came on a goal by senior center halfback Dede Biles.

The Tar Babies have only one game left on their schedule—a make-up game on Saturday against the Durham Club team. They hope, however, to schedule the Duke JVs for another game this season.
