Barry Gardner

Barry L. Gardner declares candidacy for Congress seat

Barry L. Gardner of Rocky Mount formally announced Thursday his candidacy for the 2nd Congressional District seat held by Rep. L. H. Fountain.

Gardner, 31, in making the announcement cited "a need for more outspoken leadership in Washington and a congressman from this district who will take a more active role in making our government more responsive to the people of this district."

Gardner, an employee of Carolina Telephone and an ordained minister, is the secretary of the Nash County Republican Party and a member of the executive committee of the state Republican Party.

The 2nd Congressional District comprises Orange, Caswell, Person, Granville, Vance, Warren, Franklin, Halifax, Northampton, Nash, Edgecombe and Wilson counties.

Fountain, who is from Edgecombe County, has not formally announced that he will seek another term, but he has indicated since last April in statements that he will run for re-election.

Fountain has stated on repeated occasions that he would like to remain in office to help President Carter balance the federal budget.

Clock missing

University Police reported a clock was stolen from the first-floor hallway in Greenlaw Hall sometime Wednesday. Police estimated the value of the clock at $30.

Council grants funds to RHA and sets up new committee

By HOWARD TROXLER
Staff Writer

The Campus Governing Council (CGC) Tuesday night granted $1,400 to one student group and referred action on two other issues to committee for further study.

The council received requests for $500 and $900 from the Residence Hall Association (RHA). The $500 grant is to be used for the RHA State Conference to be held in Chapel Hill this weekend. The $900 appropriation is for continued operation of RHA for the remainder of the year.

The CGC established a select committee composed of students, CGC members, University administrators and a faculty member to study and recommend revisions in the current CGC budgetary process, during which all funded student organizations formally present their budget requests to the CGC for approval.

The current system has come under fire from students, both inside and outside Student Government who claim the system is unwieldy and unfair to some organizations. The committee will make recommendations for reform of the budgetary process later in the year.

Student Body President Bill Moss indicated that the move is intended to bolster support for the student-fee increase by quelling past criticisms about the way the allocation process is handled.

"The primary intention in setting up this committee is to answer a lot of questions students have had about the way their money is being spent now," Moss said. "Whether or not the fee increase passes, it is important that the council spend the money as well as it can. This committee should insure that if the fee increase is passed, the extra money will be handled properly and in the best interest of the student body."

The council also heard arguments from UNC student Shelly Droescher about eliminating restrictions on Student Legal Services (SLS), a legal aid program provided for students by Student Government.

Droescher argued before the council that the restrictions placed on SLS lawyer Dorothy Bernholz are unfair to students. Bernholz may not represent students in legal action against the University.

Droescher said that under these restrictions, students often were left with no legal recourse when they were wronged by the University.

"In my case, it was a $40 parking ticket," she said. "But to fight it in court, it would cost me $1,000. I can't afford that. But I can't afford the $40 either."

"What if the University does something really wrong? Who can fight it? They know we can't."

The council carefully refrained from taking a stand on the issue and instead referred it to the Legal Advisory Committee, a student committee charged with overseeing SLS, for further study.

The council also authorized the Chapel Hill branch of Common Cause to hold a mock referendum on issues such as the Panama Canal. The vote will be held in conjunction with the student-fee referendum Nov. 16.

Geodesic dome makes unique home

instructions and enough hubs for the size dome they wanted. The hubs are made of metal and have six extensions with slots for wooden two-by-fours.

Everything fits together into a puzzle of geometric shapes, Mansfield said. The outside framework took only one day to construct. Afterwards, they nailed on plywood and shingles and added insulation.

"A lot of individuality" went into making the dome, Mansfield said. The kit allows for as many as four openings for doors or extensions, and windows can be put anywhere.

An extension to the back of the dome will serve as a bathroom once a ditch is dug from the house to a well 400 yards away, Mansfield said. As of now, they have no running water and must use an outhouse.

Nevertheless, the dome is quite civilized in most aspects. Electricity and heat are no problem. A wood stove gives them "more than enough heat at no cost," he said, and they have an oven, a refrigerator, a television and a telephone.

A loft splits the dome and allows for separate upstairs and downstairs bedrooms. The three or four soccer posters make you feel as if you were inside a soccer ball.

Baroff and Mansfield are both Chapel Hillians like the remote setting away from town. "There's no one out here to disturb you," Mansfield said. But both usually go home on weekends to get a home-cooked meal.

Mansfield said occasionally someone will walk by and give the place a second glance to see if it is real. He said two old women who lived about a mile away stopped one time to watch the construction. One asked if the boys were building an igloo.

When the boys said no, that it was a geodesic dome, Mansfield said the woman replied, "Well, we think it's cute. All you need is some petunias and that thing would be pretty."
