

Students discuss interviews Impression matter of selling self

By MARTHA WAGGONER
Staff Writer

Making a good impression in an interview with potential employers is a matter of selling yourself, according to students involved recently in an on-campus recruiting program.

"You try to show someone you could help his company," said Jim Northington, a UNC senior who is preparing for his second interview.

Graduate school interviews differ from sessions with employers, according to Jane Orahod. "They're trying to sell themselves rather than you trying to sell yourself."

Orahod and Northington were among the students questioned recently who have participated in interviews arranged through an on-campus recruiting program sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement office.

Students questioned agreed that preparation is the basic step in preparing for a job interview. A student can prepare by reading the literature provided by the company. Other students prepare by talking to other interviewees.

One recruiter said finding out about the interviewing company is the most important step. "One might just be the job that's very important to you," Eaton Corporation recruiter Sunnie Hoffman said. "You should be interested enough to do a little research on them."

"Companies are looking for people really interested in working for their company. They're looking for someone who's looking for something more — opportunity, growth. Some students sound like they want the same job 20 years from now."

She added that a degree in business administration gives a student "the opportunity to go in many different directions. Today you can't get through the door without a college degree."

"An MBA is not that important, but in 10 years, you won't be able to get a job without one. People now are being very selective."

James Krause, a May 1977 graduate using the recruiting program, advised students to "stay in school, get as many degrees as you can and when they throw you out, the jobs come running to you."

Krause, who had a job and quit, said he is 23 and does not know what he wants to do. "I think that's common," he said. "Ninety-five percent of the students probably don't know what they want to do."

Buddy Lewter, a senior, has been through 11 interviews. "Right now I don't have any prospects," he said. "So far it's been a disappointment at the mailbox."

On-campus interviews organized

Career Planning and Placement is organizing the last segments of the on-campus job recruiting program for this semester.

The last registration-orientation meeting for the program will be held at 11 a.m., Nov. 15, in the Frank Porter Graham Lounge in the Carolina Union.

Under the program, eight to 15 employers visit the campus each day to interview seniors and graduates.

October and November are the most active months for recruiters during the fall semester, according to Jane Kendall of the Career Planning and Placement office.

AMA, ABA ask for repeal of penalties for grass use

From United Press International
CHICAGO (UPI) — The American Medical Association and the American Bar Association issued a joint appeal to Congress and state legislatures Sunday to repeal criminal penalties for use of marijuana.

"We believe the time has come to liberalize laws regarding the possession of marijuana for personal use," said the five-paragraph statement by the two Chicago-based organizations, both of which previously had urged the lessening of criminal penalties concerning marijuana.

"In too many states, statutes exact punishment that far exceeds the crime," the statement said. "We agree with President Carter, who showed a reasonable attitude in asking that the possession of insignificant amounts for personal use should not subject the user to criminal charges."

Black group blasts plan

GREENSBORO — A group of black North Carolinians says it is "outraged" by the state's plan to desegregate the 16-campus University of North Carolina system.

G. L. Laws, a spokesperson for the North Carolina Alumni and Friends Coalition, said the group is particularly upset that state officials are risking the loss of federal funds by defying guidelines and timetables set by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

After meeting for two days in Greensboro, a group of about 75 blacks drew up a statement blasting UNC officials for their response to HEW guidelines.

"First, the group is appalled that state officials are jeopardizing critical federal funds — $100 million — by their defiance of the HEW criteria and guidelines," Laws said in the statement.

"The general administration of the University system and its governing board refuse to admit that there still remain strong evidences of a (racially) dual system," he said.

Reston

the justice system was perverted — one of the major points of the book.

"We've had the notion that the system works, especially after Watergate. Well, in this case, the system didn't work. A new system was created, one that uses the media extensively and in which only the lawyer-publicists belong."

The heart of the book is the guilt or innocence of Joan Little, and she is at the center of this question. But Reston says his talks with Little were unproductive. She had been trained by her attorney, Jerry Paul, on how to answer questions, Reston says, and she was so accustomed to answering them that talking to her was of little use.

Instead, Reston relies on the opinions of others and evidence he found.

"I hope it's revealing to the reader to realize his own prejudices. I hope it raises the question of what guilty means and will change the idea of what a heroine is."

Kalapana Hawaii's Best

Clearly, its music is the lure — a grand mixture of Hawaiian jazz, pop, and some contemporary folk rock, popularized in the group's premiere LP which, to date, has sold 65,000 copies within the state. No other local act — Ceckino and Kapono included — has commanded that kind of attention in a six-month span.
