advisers

counselors and counselor interns.

"We offer four basic services," Lawler says. "Testing, career exploration, personal counseling and a resource library where students can find information on graduate and professional schools and potential careers."

"We get many referrals from advisers in South Building. This or the Mental Health Center is where students with personal problems go. We help identify interests, values and skills."

Yet another major resource for students living in dormitories is the resident assistant. RAs are graduate and undergraduate students who live in the dorms and are paid to assist residents with a wide variety of problems.

"Our office has a broader base than just academic advising," Jim Osteen of University housing told the Committee on Academic Advising. "We're concerned with the total growth of the student within the residence hall."

"RAs at the student level bear the brunt of advising. We try to impress on them that they are peer counselors and their limitations as such. But academic advising is an official part of their job."

"To that extent it interferes with advising on the dean level. There is no communication between housing and the General College and Arts and Sciences."

Other, more specialized advising programs are available on campus, but those outlined above are the programs which potentially can serve the greatest number of students.

Students and administrators, including the advisers themselves, have pointed out several problems with the individual systems and the overall program and potential solutions. These problems and solutions will be the topic of Part Three of this series.

Select committee appointed

UNC-TV expansion to be studied

By GEORGE SHADROU
Staff Writer

A select committee to investigate the expansion of the UNC-TV Network has been appointed by Carl J. Stewart, speaker of the N.C. House of Representatives.

The educational network broadcasts across North Carolina, serving 930 public schools and approximately 750,000 students every week.

But according to George Bair, director of educational television, signals fail to reach several areas of the state.

Broadcast signals are not strong enough to provide adequate reception in some parts of the East. In the West, mountains block some of the signals.

A bill up for consideration by the Senate in May, however — the Adams-Ramsey bill — provides for three new transmitters to alleviate most of the problems in the East.

The bill includes more than $90 million for improvements across the state, with $2.1 million of this amount appropriated for the transmitters.

Because of mountainous terrain in the western part of the state, any reasonable number of transmitters will not solve the problem, said Alan MacIntyre, UNC-TV director of engineering.

In addition to the erection of more transmitters, the committee also will consider the following alternatives:

- Installing translators to amplify the signal as well as direct it into a specific area.

- Working the UNC-TV system into a commercial cablevision network.

- Supplying non-participating schools with video-cassette systems that will show taped educational programs.

MacIntyre said all of these alternatives can be beneficial to covering the West. All Westerners will not be completely served, he said, unless they make an effort to receive the signal.

MacIntyre said persons in the West must have UHF antennas and must know how to use them before the problem will be solved.

Cablevision could help alleviate the problem, he said, but persons would have to be willing to pay for the service.

Some of the funds for Western expansion already have been allocated through previous legislation, but a total estimate of the costs never has been given.

Blair said UNC-TV has been under considerable pressure to provide coverage in the West.

MacIntyre indicated the job has been done gradually due to technical and financial problems in dealing with the mountainous terrain.

In appointing the committee, Stewart said, "People in the West often get the feeling that are short-changed in many state programs and services."

"In the area of educational television as well as others, the out-of-sight, out-of-mind situation should not apply to any citizen or any area in North Carolina."

fees

an outspoken opponent of the fee increases, was one of the few persons interviewed who said he believes students will vote against the proposed increase. "If enough people will come out and vote," he said, "it won't pass."

Tindall gave three main reasons why he expects students to oppose the increase:

"First, it's not the right time for an increase. The right time is when students have confidence in Student Government."

Tindall said he felt students have lacked confidence since 1975 when Mike O'Neal was Student Government treasurer.

Tindall also said he felt most Student Government officials reinforce their opinions with other student officials instead of polling students. He said CGC is generally out of touch with the student body.

The Graduate and Professional Student Federation opposes the fee increase because it feels the money will not benefit graduate students to any degree, treasurer Jack Molyneux said.

The Student Consumer Action Union takes no official stand on the increase because the membership is divided on the issue, President Bill Parmelee said.

Battle considered for judgeship

Chapel Hill attorney Gordon Battle is one of the attorneys Gov. Jim Hunt is considering for a Superior Court judgeship for Orange and Chatham counties, a spokesperson for the governor said.

Battle, a Democrat, was endorsed unanimously for the position by the Orange County Bar Association.

Other nominees include attorneys

Lucius Cheshire and Dalton Loftin of Hillsborough. Loftin, president of the Chatham-Orange District Bar, has said he supports Battle's candidacy.

Cheshire, a former county attorney, is an organizer of the Orange Committee, the group of conservative Democrats that filed suit last spring asking the N.C. Board of Elections to purge students' names from voter registration books in Orange County.

All three candidates were checked by the State Bureau of Investigation before the statewide Judicial Nominating Committee submitted the names to Hunt. The screening board members were appointed by Hunt, Chief Justice of North Carolina Susie Sharp and legislative leaders.

The spokesperson said the governor will announce his appointee by Nov. 23.

FOR THE RECORD

It was Stone, not Gold

Statements concerning the decision by the Chapel Hill Police Department to crack down on traffic violations by bicyclists were misdistributed to Capt. Arnold Gold in a Daily Tar Heel story Friday. The statements actually were made by Police Chief Herman Stone at a press conference. Gold was at the conference, but he was not quoted in the story. The DTH regrets the error.

THE NEUTRON BOMB IS A CRIME AGAINST NATURE

The neutron bomb is designed to release deadly radiation which will create an environment hostile to life forms — plant, animal and human. The water will be unfit to drink. The air will be unfit to breathe. The aftereffects may continue for years. This ecological destruction will begin when the first neutron bomb is tested.

We can say NO to the neutron bomb. We need your help to do it. Please fill out and send in the coupon below.
