Counseling center matches interest tests with job plans

The University Counseling Service (UCS) offers a variety of free tests along with personal and career counseling.

Interest inventory tests and personality tests are the tests most often used with counseling, counselor Alice Lawler says.

The interest inventory test "is designed to help a student see how his interest patterns compare with the interest patterns of people in various occupations," Lawler says. "But it is not the only factor in helping a student choose a career, she adds.

Personality tests are used "mainly to help the counselor and the individual student take a look at some of the important personality needs of the student," Lawler says. While personality tests are used mainly in personal counseling, they sometimes are used to see how those personality needs are used in a career, she says.

Lawler stresses that the recommended procedure is to participate in the counseling service and in the testing program. "The tests alone never tell a student what he should do," she explains. Last year just under 2,000 students participated in both services of UCS.

While IQ tests are not used often, UCS does offer them. Luanna Dorsett, director of testing services at UCS, says,

"The IQ test is used in the context of other tests given. I can't think of a time when the IQ test alone was used. A lot of researchers feel the fact that the student got as far as college proves they don't need the IQ test."

A service added this year for students searching for a career is the Career Exploration Workshop, held whenever enough students sign up. To sign up, call UCS and express an interest in the workshop. UCS then will set up a time convenient for the greatest number of students.

parking

would be built behind the existing facility and would provide 842 more parking spaces.

If approved by the trustees, construction would begin during the summer of 1978 and would be completed by mid-1979.

"The University would have a debt requirement of $200,000 a year for 20 years (if a parking deck addition is built)," Arne said.

Arne said the parking deck addition would not solve the parking problems of students. And those problems will become more severe in the future, Arne said. The University's plans to expand the Carolina Union would make 600-800 fewer spaces available for students Arne said. Faculty members who now use the Union lot would be assigned to the lots and spaces now used by students, he said.

If the trustees give final approval to the South Campus parking deck addition, students would lose parking spaces despite greater University expenditures for added parking facilities, the transportation director said.

Chapel Hill-Carrboro parade set for Tuesday

More than 100 business and civic groups have entered parade units in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Christmas Parade set for Tuesday night, according to Joe Augustine, executive director of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants' Association.

"Christmas By Candlelight" will be the theme as parade participants turn on electric candles in windows along the parade route from Morehead Planetarium on Franklin Street in Chapel Hill to Main and Fidelity streets in Carrboro.

The parade begins at 6 p.m. Tuesday.

More than 4,500 persons are expected to either ride on floats or walk in the parade procession, Augustine said.

Nine professionally made floats are sponsored by individual merchants. Other merchants, church groups and individuals also have entered floats.

Debbie Mixon of Chapel Hill, Miss Teenage America for Durham-Chapel Hill, will ride in the procession. The event is sponsored by the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants' Association.
