Trees get cold too

Students aren't the only ones who must brave the biting winds and chilling cold. This stately oak has faced the trauma of winter for many years without a toboggan, a goose-down parka or even gloves for its little twigs. Drop-add and the beginning of classes may not be half as bad as having your feet in the frozen ground for three months. Staff photo by Allen Jernigan.

'DTH' photographers needed

The Daily Tar Heel needs three photographers. Applicants must have their own cameras and have had darkroom experience.

To apply, bring your portfolio to the DTH photo department or call Allen Jernigan, photography editor, at 933-0245.

Site for elderly home undecided Decision reversed on Northampton conversion

Northampton residents can now relax instead of relocate. The Episcopal Home for the Aging, Inc. has reversed its decision to convert Northampton Plaza into a home for the elderly by August 1978.

John Harden, press spokesperson for the Episcopal Home for the Aging Inc., said the home's board of directors changed its decision because the $4-million price tag for the property was too high. Only 50 persons signed up for the home while at least 62 are necessary for the project's success, said Harden, a board member. He said the board will not reconsider converting Northampton Plaza into a home for the elderly.

Instead, the Episcopal Home for the Aging, Inc., which operates the Penick home for the elderly in Southern Pines, may build the new home in the Greensboro-High Point-Winston-Salem area.

Although several persons supported construction of the home at a Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen hearing in October, others expressed concern about relocating approximately 225 tenants now living in the high rise. The Episcopal Home was also displeased with a permit requirement for building a sidewalk on Airport Road, Chapel Hill Fire Inspector Joe Robertson said.

Other permit requirements called for signs and lighting, landscaping plans, fire safety improvements and an outdoor recreation area.

The manager of Northampton Plaza said Tuesday she sent letters to all tenants Dec. 17 to inform them of the reversed decision. She said no lease contracts were affected by the decision or by its reversal.

Sub-freezing weather chills Chapel Hillians

By ROBERT THOMASON
Staff Writer

More heads were covered than not, and all bodies were wrapped warmly Monday and Tuesday in Chapel Hill as the area experienced the below-freezing weather confronting the nation.

Temperatures stayed in the twenties during the days and dove to the teens Monday night. With the exception of a half-hour snow Monday at about 7:30 a.m., there was no precipitation.

An air mass from Canada arrived early Monday morning and brought low temperatures and gusty winds. At 2 a.m. the National Weather Service at the Raleigh-Durham airport recorded a temperature of 61 degrees. An hour later the temperature had dropped to 41. By 8 a.m. it was down to 27.

The service predicted the twenty-degree weather will continue through the weekend and possibly be accompanied with precipitation. Clear skies were expected for today, with increasing cloudiness Thursday.

A high-pressure cell has been located in the Appalachian region for a week, keeping the weather clear and cool. The area's atmospheric pressure was approximately 31 inches of Mercury Monday.

Although red noses and hunched shoulders have abounded for the last few days, Chapel Hill has not been the worst hit area of the nation. The student infirmary and the North Carolina Memorial Hospital have reported no injuries due to the weather. The Chapel Hill and University Police have attributed no accidents or mishaps to the weather.

Cold and snow dealt a number of deaths across the nation, however, according to UPI reports. A 2-year-old girl froze to death after leaving her Illinois farmhouse in only a nightgown. Two Cleveland men died of heart attacks while shoveling snow.

One of the coldest places in the country was Thorhult, Minn., where temperatures dropped to 34 degrees below zero.

Several of the country's power companies said they had critical supply shortages, and still others were forced to cut back their power.

Bill Martin, local manager for Duke Power Co., said power loads are still below last winter's peaks.

However, two of Duke's major generators are inoperative because of scheduled maintenance. If the cold weather persists, the lack of the generators could shorten power supplies, Martin said. He urged consumers to conserve energy during the cold weather.
