Gallo, lettuce boycott a local success

By PAM KELLEY
Staff Writer

The United Farm Workers union ended its national boycott against non-UFW harvested table grapes, lettuce and Gallo wines Tuesday, and local UFW leaders and sympathizers called the boycott a success.

Chapel Hill Alderman Gerry Cohen said Wednesday that the settlement with the growers proves that boycotts are useful and effective.

"UFW boycotts began in 1968 over grapes," Cohen said. "They were organized to ask consumers to refuse to buy non-UFW-harvested farm products in order to get growers to settle with the union."

"The boycott of these products was organized by the UFW in order to gain better health benefits and safety conditions. Wages were not the major issue."

"The people in Chapel Hill have made an effective effort not to buy boycotted goods. Flyers and leaflets distributed at supermarkets, as well as word of mouth, have served their purpose."

Joan Preiss, head of the UFW chapter in the Triangle area, said Wednesday that although the UFW did not succeed in getting area chain stores to take the boycotted products off their shelves, many local merchants did cease to carry them.

Martha Jenkins of the International Chef Gourmet Shop of Chapel Hill said her store does not carry Gallo wine because of the boycott.

"When customers come in looking for Gallo wine, we explain the boycott situation to them. Many are unaware of the issue."

Preiss attributed the success of the boycott to individuals' efforts and the support of many diverse groups. She said organizations in the area including the American Civil Liberties Union, North Carolina Ministry, NAACP, Orange County Democratic Convention and Women's International League for Peace and Freedom all have supported the UFW cause.

Although Preiss said she is pleased with the settlement, she stressed that the fight for UFW rights is far from over. "Growers are trying to undermine the effectiveness of our organization with such efforts as trying to defeat California Gov. Jerry Brown, a sympathizer with the UFW cause."

"We will continue to build, strengthen and expand our organization. The UFW will train farmworkers so they are able to negotiate with growers for their rights. Our job is really helping people to help themselves."

The lettuce boycott began in 1970 when UFW workers struck Salinas, Calif., area lettuce growers. The strike was broken later by court injunctions.

Chavez initiated the grape boycott in 1973 when the Teamsters Union moved into California's fields and began signing growers away from his union as contracts expired.

The Gallo boycott began in 1973 when E. and J. Gallo Vineyards signed a contract with the Teamsters Union after the UFW struck the winery because its contract had expired.

Chavez said California's Agricultural Labor Relations Act, which became law in the late summer of 1975, was instrumental in ending the boycotts.

He said the union has signed more than 100 contracts with California growers since the act went into effect, and negotiations are under way with 117 other growers where the UFW won union representation elections.
