Ford scores 22 in 66-64 victory Thirteen-minute Heel stall leads to win over Terps

By GENE UPCHURCH
Sports Editor

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Carolina's basketball game with Maryland here Wednesday night was hotly contested down to the last shot in the last second even though the second half was about as interesting to watch as the nearby Potomac River.

The Tar Heels overcame poor free-throw shooting late in the game and the testy Maryland zone defense to pull out the 66-64 win, which moves Carolina farther out into first place in the ACC with a 7-2 record (19-4 overall). Maryland is now alone on the bottom of the ACC with a record of 1-7 following Clemson's 91-81 win over Wake Forest.

Carolina decided to go to its four-corner stall offense with 13:34 left in the game and the score tied at 58 because the Tar Heels were having trouble getting rebounds and second shots from the Terrapins 3-2 defense.

As soon as the Terps would switch to a man-to-man defense, Carolina would go back to its regular offense. As soon as Carolina would go into its regular offense, the Terps would switch back to its zone.

"We didn't want to play with that zone the way they were rebounding," UNC coach Dean Smith said after the game. "They didn't chase us, which was probably a smart move by them. We made it tough on ourselves by missing those free throws at the end."

After Carolina went to its stall, it outscored Maryland 6-2 in the next 11 minutes. Phil Ford, who finished the game with 22 points, was called for two five-second violations. Maryland controlled one of the resulting jump balls, and Lawrence

Boston scored to bring the Terps within two at 64-62 with 47 seconds left.

Carolina had trouble getting the ball frontcourt after that, but Al Wood got open and scored to move Carolina ahead by four. Tom Zaliagiris missed the front end of a one-and-one after Boston was called for an illegal pick on an in-bounds play.

Maryland got the rebound and Jo Jo Hunter, who had 11 points — nine of them in the first half — hit a shot with 10 seconds left to move the Terps back within two. Al Wood missed a one-and-one opportunity six seconds later, and Hunter had a shot to tie it bounce off the rim as the clock ran out.

"I thought we'd come up here and after a little action in the first half blow them out," UNC forward Mike O'Koren said, "but that didn't happen. The team that stays the calmest will win."

O'Koren said Maryland was one of the strongest teams that Carolina has faced all season.

"We were putting body on them, and the refs were calling fouls on us," he said.

Carolina led by two at halftime after a sizzling first half in which the Tar Heels shot 54 percent and the Terrapins 55 percent. Both teams hit the same number of shots in the second half, but Carolina's percentage shot up to 71 percent while the Terps' dropped to 45 percent. Carolina hit 58 percent for the game. Maryland hit 51 percent.

"This is as ready as anybody's been against us," Smith said. "Maryland was primed and ready to play."

UNC library system goes up in rankings Increases posted in three divisions, according to ratings of national study

By LESLIE CHILTON
Staff Writer

The UNC library system climbed significantly in three major categories in the 1977 rankings by the Association of Research Libraries.

In rankings of almost 100 universities from across the country, UNC rose from 49th in 1976 to 38th in 1977 in volumes added, from 28th to 21st in materials and expenditures and from 30th to 28th in total operating expenditures, according to the report.

"We're holding our own but just barely," said Dr. James Govan, University librarian. "We still face a number of situations where we can't take advantage" of opportunities.

In total volumes held, UNC ranks 25th with 2,274,173. Duke University is 19th with 2,869,558, while Harvard ranks in the No. 1 position. N.C. State was not ranked.

During the same one-year period, Duke fell from 12th to 22nd in volumes added but went from 37th to 36th in materials and expenditures.

The Association of Research

Libraries is a private association of university and private research libraries.

Govan said that the UNC Board of Governors' increase in academic library support in the last four years has helped immensely through a "concentrated effort to bring our budgets up to what was considered to be an adequate level."

Before the program began, the libraries were regarded as just part of the University and received no separate funds.

Under the current program, the library administration on each of the 16 UNC-system campuses determines spending, but Govan said he isn't sure what the funding situation will be when the program ends next year.

Govan said the addition to Wilson Library hasn't helped at all in providing space for new acquisitions, but it had enabled the administration to consolidate library holdings in one building from the many storage places they formerly occupied on campus.

He said the new library to be constructed in the Carolina Union parking lot would provide more space when it opens in 1982.

Try interdisciplinary studies Undecided about selecting a major

By EDDIE MARKS
Staff Writer

If none of the conventional majors or double majors satisfies a UNC student, he has an alternative in the Interdisciplinary Studies program.

Created in 1971, the Office of Experimental Studies allows a student to create his own major in Interdisciplinary Studies by taking courses in two or more fields without really majoring in any one of them.

Lewis Lipsitz, assistant dean of experimental studies, says the procedure is simple. "There is no minimum QPA requirement, and you don't have to be an outstanding student."

The course requirements for an interdisciplinary major are worked out with a faculty sponsor in the departments involved. The General College requirements and grade minimums are the same as for a student with a conventional major.

An interdisciplinary major is based on 60 semester hours. The core of the major consists of 18 hours in related courses from at least two departments. At least 30 hours must consist of electives agreed upon in advance by the student and his sponsor. The electives must come from at least four departments other than the two core departments. The remaining 12 hours are free electives.

A student's diploma, Lipsitz says, would note that the student had received a Bachelor of Arts in Interdisciplinary Studies. The field of study would be shown only on the student's transcript.

"The students create their own titles for the majors," he says.

One hundred and ten students at UNC are in interdisciplinary programs, Lipsitz says. "One of the main problems they have is that there may be no one in a similar program to compare notes with. Also, some graduate schools require them to make up certain courses before accepting them."

But most of the interdisciplinary majors, Lipsitz says, are satisfied with their programs. "I know of one student," he says, "who actually had an easier time getting into graduate school at Stanford University because of his interdisciplinary major."

Lipsitz says a survey of UNC interdisciplinary graduates showed that most had excellent results in finding a job in their field of study.

Teresa Beck, a junior from Leland, N.C., is pursuing an interdisciplinary major entitled "Roles in Society."

"I was interested in psychology and sociology," she says, "but I really didn't want to major in either one. The interdisciplinary major gives me a broader overview of both subjects that I would not have gotten otherwise."

Beck says her biggest problem is with the faculty. "A lot of the faculty don't know about the program, and I have to explain to them what I'm doing."

Beck says she is pleased with the overall program. "I think it's a good thing, and it needs to be talked up. I

Readin', River-Runnin' in Arizona Summer speech course stresses the three Rs

UNC Extension Division awards credit for unique river classroom course

Howard Doll of the UNC speech department will get down to basics with his Speech 95 students this summer, emphasizing the three Rs.

But Doll's three Rs aren't the traditional reading, 'ritin' and 'rithmetic. Instead, they're readin' and river runnin'.

Doll's course is speech 95, "Oral Interpretation and Readers' Theater." The classroom will be at the Fern Mountain Ranch near Flagstaff, Ariz.

The course is part of a summer program sponsored by the UNC Extension Division. It is being conducted in cooperation with the Museum of Northern Arizona. Instructors, in addition to Doll of UNC, will be from the University of Arizona, Arizona State University and Northern Arizona University. Participants will receive three hours credit from UNC or Arizona State.

The theme of the course is the literature of the river. A unique aspect will be the white-water trip down the Colorado River.

"This is probably the only place in the United States where something like this is offered," Doll said. "We read during the lunch hour and while drifting in the river. I wanted to put together a class to study the river and gain understanding of it."

The course will feature works of literature "immortalizing the beauty, serenity, splendor and history of the Colorado River and the Grand Canyon."

Among those that will form the basis for discussion, scripting and performance by students are Wind in the Willows, Huckleberry Finn and Deliverance.

"Stroke, stroke." Experience the thrill of victory as the white water raft makes its way down the Colorado River this summer as part of an extension course entitled, "Readin' and River Runnin'." The course is co-sponsored by the UNC speech department and Arizona State University.

Holleman to run for 'DTH' editor, calls for change

Jim Holleman, a junior majoring in radio, television, and motion pictures, from Durham, announced his candidacy for Daily Tar Heel editor Wednesday.

Holleman said it is the responsibility of the DTH to interpret as well as report the news. "The paper should be used as an instrument to educate and inform those most directly affected by what goes on," Holleman said. "It should interpret the news in terms of how it directly affects the student body."

Holleman also said he would reorganize the editorial staff of the paper. "Instead of having three or four people write the editorials all the time, I would have an editorial board that would meet once a week to discuss and decide what the editorial direction would be."

Holleman said the DTH should include state and national news which affects students. "It should first address itself to the campus news, but most students on campus never read another daily newspaper."

He said he would reassess the assignment of space to stories in the paper to include more comprehensive coverage of important events, such as the Women's Festival.

Holleman also said the paper needed to incorporate a sense of humor into its approach to the news.

"I don't intend to ridicule the Tar Heel by turning it into some kind of ridiculous daily," he said. "But it does serve a campus, and it needs some sort of informal, casual humor. Not satire or ridicule, but there are ironic and humorous possibilities that aren't explored."

"I get the feeling that sometimes it (the DTH) does take itself too seriously."

Concerning distribution, Holleman said he was not familiar enough with the paper's daily operation to determine what action he would take to improve the present system.

"I've had people tell me the papers aren't there in the mornings on their way to class," he said. "It would take me getting in and finding out what's done now before I could tell what to do."
