

Chapel Hill transit hit $1,500 gone

Thieves broke into 15 Chapel Hill buses Saturday night and took about $1,500 in change from fare boxes.

Bill Callahan, administrative assistant in Chapel Hill's transportation department, said thieves cut through locks on the fare boxes while buses were parked at the town garage on Plant Road.

"This type of theft has never happened before," Callahan said. "We've had cases of suspected theft but nothing quite like this."

Callahan said a town employee discovered the theft Sunday. There are still no suspects, police said.

The fare boxes were equipped with special locks to decrease chances of tampering with and opening the boxes, Callahan said.

As a result of the theft, Callahan said, officials are looking at procedural changes for handling fare-box money. Fare boxes are now emptied on a regular basis, although money must be left locked in the buses at times, Callahan said.

News in Brief

Grocery prices remain stable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Grocery shoppers got some relief from the rising food prices in August but the cost of housing and medical care kept the inflation rate climbing steadily, the Labor Department reported Tuesday.

Food purchased at the grocery store remained at about the same price in August while overall consumer prices were going up 0.6 percent.

The average worker lost ground to inflation during the month because his pay increases failed to keep up with rising prices, the department said.

Administration economists were encouraged by the August price figures, however, because the increases were smaller than at the start of the year. Prices went up 0.9 percent for three months in a row before rising 0.5 percent in July and 0.6 percent in August.

Egypt launches Mideast peace drive

Egypt launched a diplomatic campaign Tuesday to win Arab backing for the Camp David agreement with Israel, telling Arab ambassadors in Cairo that the accords are only a step toward a comprehensive Mideast settlement.

Most Arab countries, including Saudi Arabia and Jordan, have announced reservations about the agreement signed by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat on the grounds it does not specifically provide for the return of East Jerusalem to the Arabs.

In Jordan, President Hafez Assad of Syria ended talks with King Hussein and flew to Saudi Arabia for a meeting with Crown Prince Fahd ibn Abdul Aziz.

Madison County elections probe continues

RALEIGH (AP) — A Madison County elections board member has told the N.C. Board of Elections that he never did anything dishonest in his year on the county board and he was largely ignorant of illegal voting practices.

Harold Ammons appeared Monday before the state board, which is holding hearings on whether he and another election official should be removed from office.

The second official, Roger Swann, did not come to the hearing. Marvin Ball has already resigned his seat as county elections board chairperson in the wake of allegations of widespread irregularities during the May 2 Democratic primary.

Natural gas bill clears hurdle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The natural gas legislation sought by the Carter administration survived another attempt to scuttle it on Tuesday, all but assuring its Senate passage when a final vote is taken today.

By a 55-36 vote, the Senate rejected a second move by opponents to return the gas price decontrol bill to committee for redrafting.

A week ago, a similar motion was rejected on a 59-39 vote. Opponents now are conceding that the measure, which would lift federal price controls from most natural gas by 1985 will be approved by a comfortable margin at a scheduled 1 p.m. vote today.

Bell addition study gets extension

By CAROL HANNER
Staff Writer

The Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen extended Monday's public hearing to investigate whether Southern Bell's proposed addition at 203 E. Rosemary St. might damage the Old Methodist Church nearby.

The board authorized the town staff to examine the feasibility of Southern Bell adding the new electronic switching station to the rear of its present building.

James Webb, owner of the 120-year-old structure, said he opposes Southern Bell's addition. He testified that two engineering consultant firms reported damage could come from disruption of the land near the church, which has been restored and is used for offices.

"If this building goes, there aren't any more like it," Webb said. "We have a right to question the information offered by Southern Bell. It's too easy for a firm of this sort to cloak itself in technical mystery."

Webb said the proposed addition also would depreciate the rental value of his offices and the property value of the surrounding neighborhood.

Southern Bell officials said the company needs the new exchange to meet Chapel Hill demands for added service.

Company officials estimated the cost of building the addition to the rear of the existing structure would be an extra $3.5 million to $4 million. The company said such an extension would involve more complex equipment-installation procedures.

Ralph Reeves of Holloway-Reeves Architects told aldermen that wood and concrete pilings would be used to fortify the ground during construction.

Constructors would use a sensitive measuring device to monitor cracks and stress on the building in order to prevent damage, Reeves added.

David Flory of Southern Bell said the company would pay for any damage to the church building.

The Board of Aldermen voted to investigate possible alternatives to the addition after several board members asked for more detailed figures and cost estimates from Southern Bell.

Judge finds youth unable to face trial

A Granville County youth charged with first-degree murder in the May 21 shooting death of UNC researcher Thomas Donnelly last week was declared mentally incapable of standing trial in Orange County Superior Court.

Judge Gordon Battle, in response to a motion filed by attorney Barry Winston for 15-year-old Mark Gabriel Wyatt, ordered that involuntary civil commitment proceedings be initiated against Wyatt.

Under involuntary civil commitment, Wyatt will continue to be held without bond in a state mental hospital. If Wyatt later is declared mentally competent to stand trial, he will be returned to the Orange County Jail without bond.

The defense previously had filed notice of an intent to enter a plea of insanity and a plea for suppression of a statement Wyatt made at the time of his arrest.

But because defense lawyers entered the plea of non-competency, the question of Wyatt's sanity at the time of the crime remains unresolved, District Attorney Wade Barber said.

Wyatt was arrested in Cherokee County in May and charged with the May 21 murder of Donnelly at the researcher's Jones Ferry Road home and the felonious larceny of Donnelly's car.

Battle ruled in his court order last week that Wyatt does not have the mental ability to aid in his defense and to understand the proceedings against him.

The major sticking point remains "modernization"—that is, how many new missile systems the United States and Russia may build during the life of the treaty and how many existing systems may be improved.

Congressional support for an arms limitation treaty with the Russians is questionable. The Carter administration acknowledged as much when it hinted last month that it might try to bypass the Senate, where ratification requires a two-thirds vote of approval, and submit the accord as an "executive agreement." That would involve a simple majority of both Senate and House.

Key senators immediately warned Carter that sending an arms agreement to Capitol Hill in anything but treaty form would guarantee its defeat.

It was last Oct. 7 in Des Moines, Iowa, that Carter, and ardent advocate of arms control, announced to the nation that the framework of a new treaty would be completed within weeks. But Carter began to back away from his rosy predictions as relations deteriorated.

The trials of prominent Soviet dissidents and of International Harvester executive Francis Crawford on currency manipulation charges clouded prospects for a new treaty for a while.

But now the climate seems to be improving. Sessions have been scheduled for today and Thursday in New York City. The possibility remains open that the talks will resume in Washington on Saturday, with Carter taking part.
