

Math, science school may boost universities

By JIM HUMMEL
Staff Writer

The North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics, scheduled to open in Durham in the fall of 1980 for gifted high school students, has received praise from educators all over the state—and some of its proponents feel the benefits may extend to the state's universities.

"I think the school is a great thing," said Thomas Isenhour, chairperson of the UNC chemistry department. "I would hope that if the school is set up right, that it could serve as a model for public schools across the state."

Isenhour said he saw only benefits in the project. He said there was a possibility graduates from the school would be drawn to area universities.

"I certainly think this type of school is a good idea," added William Smith, chairperson of the UNC mathematics department. Smith said the school would give exceptional students an excellent opportunity to develop their potential.

Smith said he felt many North Carolina students could take advantage of the school. "There are many students who have completed high school courses and take courses at a university early," he pointed out.

Although the school will concentrate on preparing students to continue in math and science fields, it also will provide them with outstanding coverage in all fields, said Quentin Lindsey, an adviser to Gov. Jim Hunt on science and public policy.

"The difference in our curriculum will be to give the people an opportunity to go beyond the usual requirements in math and science," Lindsey said. "If, however, the student wishes to pursue some other field we want to him to be well prepared."

The idea for the science and math school originally came from John Ehle, a Durham novelist and former faculty member at UNC. Plans for the project got underway in 1977.

Funding for the school will come from a variety of sources, Lindsey said. The Watts Hospital building in Durham, valued at $6 million, has been donated to house the school.

"There are six major areas of funding," Lindsey said. "They are the local community, private corporations, private citizens, private foundations, federal agencies and the state General Assembly. As you can see, we won't be relying heavily on state money. I say total state money would be significantly less than 50 percent."

Lindsey said he is hopeful the school will be able to provide free tuition. "It is our intent that no qualified student that has been admitted be turned away because of financial limitations," he said.

A board of 25 trustees has been chosen to lead the project, including 15 members appointed by Gov. Jim Hunt and one member of the UNC Board of Governors.

When the school opens in 1980, 300 students will be admitted, with an additional 300 enrolling the following year. By 1982 a full enrollment of 900 students will attend the school.

"To our knowledge there is no other school in the country like this that is residential, as we will be," Lindsey said.

Asked if the school's graduates would have an influence on the number of students matriculating at Research Triangle universities, Lindsey said, "You have to realize that the number so students we graduate will not be that large."

"Hopefully, the students will go on to higher education in this area and I hope that those who go out of state would possibly return."

Reaction to the school has not been totally favorable, however. Robert Hershey, headmaster of Durham Academy, said the proposed school could have a negative impact on his and other schools.

"In essence, the biggest factor will be the teacher market in this area," Hershey said. "Even now, excellent math and science teachers are difficult to locate. With the opening of the N.C. School of Science and Mathematics the market will become even tighter.

"I think the idea of running a boarding school for 900 students is a massive undertaking. I spent eight years at a school with only 375 students and that was problem enough."

Hershey said a number of questions still will have to be answered concerning the school. One is whether the boarding school will allow day students to enroll, he said.

Iranian Parliament opens debate on Bakhtiar rule

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Thousands of protesters chanting "Death to the shah" marched peacefully through the streets Sunday demanding that the monarchy be abolished and an Islamic republic be set up to replace Iran's new civilian government.

As they marched, the Iranian Parliament opened debate on whether to endorse the government of Prime Minister Shahpour Bakhtiar, a step that would pave the way for Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi to leave his strife-torn nation.

Twenty-two of the 268 legislators of the Majlis, the lower house of Parliament, spoke Sunday, half in favor of Bakhtiar's government and half against. The Majlis, which traditionally does not meet on Mondays, scheduled a vote of confidence for Tuesday. The Senate will debate the issue Monday.

Majlis delegate Hassan Harzandi, who spoke against the government, said Iran's pains are not political but economic and asked whether the new regime would "stop pouring Iranian money into the pockets of the Americans under the pretext of buying arms."

Sheikh ul-Islami, who favored Bakhtiar, said the government's "best bet for victory will be precise and forceful implementation of the constitution, a constitution in which no one can find one word against Islam." He said opposition still will come from traitors and Iranians "who have suffered and who have grievances because they have been cheated and...lied to and...given false promises."

Political observers said the new government would not receive rubber-stamp approval but that both houses probably will give Bakhtiar the vote of confidence that would allow him to begin carrying out a program aimed at pulling Iran from the brink of economic and political collapse.

The newspaper Avandegan reported Sunday that it had received a "communique" from a leftist group called "Sazman Moudaheden," meaning "Organization of Unity," claiming responsibility for the machine gun murder of American oil executive Paul Grimm last Dec. 23.

Grimm, an official of the Western-run Oil Service Co., was ambushed in the southwest Iranian city of Ahwaz. The newspaper said the group claimed it killed Grimm to show it sympathized with Iran's striking oil workers.

The army generally refrained from trying to break up the Tehran demonstrations, which were led by protesters loyal to the Ayatullah Khomeini, the exiled religious leader of Iran's dominant Shiite Moslem sect.

News in Brief

Anti-guerrilla unity urged in Rhodesia

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP)—Bishop Abel Muzorewa, one of three moderate blacks in the ruling transition government's executive council, Sunday urged black and white Rhodesians to join together to face the stepped-up onslaught by black nationalist guerrillas.

He said the war, initially aimed at toppling the white regime of Prime Minister Ian Smith, had turned into a "cruel game of confused, unbelievable torture and murder."

Carter policy draws double protests

ATLANTA (AP)—Civil rights activists protesting President Carter's austerity program marched Sunday to Ebenezer Baptist Church only to find that a group of Iranian protesters had gotten there first.

Carter was at the church to receive the Martin Luther King Jr. Non-Violent Peace Prize during observances of the slain civil rights leader's 50th birthday.

The civil rights marchers discovered about 200 Iranian student demonstrators camped across the street from the church, where they hanged and later burned an effigy of Carter in protest of his support for Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

Abzug calls firing 'naivete' about women

NEW YORK (AP)—Bella Abzug, former co-chairperson of the President's National Advisory Council on Women, said Sunday that President Jimmy Carter showed a great deal of "naivete" in firing her last week for criticizing his economic policy.

Abzug, speaking on ABC-TV's Issues and Answers program, said the president was naive to expect the remaining women on the committee to continue working if she was replaced by a "yes person."

Iraq, Syria merging against Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP)—Iraq and Syria have reportedly agreed to merge under a single leader and combine their armies on Israel's northeastern border, Israel radio said Sunday. The state radio quoted foreign reports attributed to Arab diplomatic sources in Damascus.

According to the report, the two countries agreed in principle to merge into one state with a single military command. The Syrian and Iraqi heads of state will meet next week to discuss details, the report said.

Rep. Flood bribery trial begins today

WASHINGTON (AP)—U.S. Rep. Daniel J. Flood, who gave up acting for a career in Congress, will be spotlighted on a new stage Monday when he goes on trial in a federal courtroom charged with trading his enormous political power for thousands of dollars in bribes.

The 75-year-old Pennsylvania Democrat, flamboyant in silk suits and fur-lined capes and sporting a villainous-looking, waxed mustache, also is accused of perjury and conspiracy in indictments handed down last year by grand juries in Los Angeles and Washington.

"I deny all these allegations, totally and unequivocally," Flood said when he pleaded innocent. He claimed then the "absurd charges" were "brought by desperate men."
