

For freshmen leaders

Fellows hold open house today

By MELANIE BILL
Staff Writer

The second of two open houses sponsored by the North Carolina Fellows Program, scheduled for 4-6 p.m. today in 302 Steele Building, will offer interested applicants the chance to meet current fellows and discuss the program.

The UNC Fellows Program is one of four in the state. Students may apply as freshmen to participate in the program, which involves monthly dinners with campus, local and state leaders in business, education and government. Fellows also attend seminars, workshops and retreats, and plan internships to help in studying leadership styles and organizational structures.

"Our main focus is the development of effective, responsible, conscientious leaders for state business, education and government," said program director Marjorie Christiansen.

Christiansen, program faculty adviser Les Garner and the current fellows will screen the applications of freshmen this spring and select approximately 50 students for preliminary interviews. From this group, 20-25 finalists are chosen for extensive interviews. Approximately 10-15 of the finalists are selected as new fellows.

"We're interested in students open to improving themselves and their human relationship skills," Christiansen said. "They should be interested in making a contribution to society and willing to learn how they can best make such a contribution."

Fellows are required to participate in a weekend workshop following selection, a sophomore semester-long seminar on leadership styles and philosophies, a junior-year group service project, a senior-year course focusing on ethics of leadership and an internship between the junior and senior years.

"It's not a social group, but it's really not an honor society either," Christiansen said. "It's a place where students talk about their futures and how they're going to develop them."

Christiansen said the fellows experience helps to prepare students for any career, whether it be law, business, medicine or independent enterprise.

"I think the students would say the best thing about it is the people you get to meet and know," Christiansen said. "We have people from outside the college who care very much about the students."

Application blanks are available from dorm resident assistants, at the Carolina Union desk and in the program office in 301 Steele. Completed applications are due in the program office by Jan. 26.

Violence erupts again despite shah exit

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Pro-shah troops battled demonstrators in the oil city of Ahwaz Wednesday, the first full day of the shah's forced "vacation" abroad, creating a major threat to the stability of Prime Minister Shapour Bakhtiar's fledgling civilian government.

At least 30 people were reported killed or wounded.

In the capital, Bakhtiar huddled with top national security advisers to plan moves for halting the violence that has plagued Iran for more than a year. Dissension also was reported breaking out among the anti-shah parties on the future shape of the country.

The widespread strikes that have crippled the nation's oil-based economy continued as workers demanded that Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, who left the country Tuesday for Egypt en route to the United States, formally give up the throne.

Bakhtiar's hard-pressed government also had to deal with the aftermath of a major earthquake that devastated remote areas in eastern Iran. Confirmed reports had 192 persons killed in three towns and some press reports said the final death total could exceed 1,000.

The prime minister's top justice official, Yahya Sadeqvaziri, resigned. The minister said present laws would not allow him to quickly bring to trial former government ministers accused of corruption and abuse of power.

In Washington, private and public comments from U.S. officials have grown more reserved, indicating a growing consensus that the Bakhtiar government has only a marginal chance of surviving and that the shah's vacation may turn into permanent exile.

Telephone contact with Ahwaz, 340 miles southwest of Tehran, was cut off. The city of 500,000 is the site of the country's major oil refinery complex on the Persian Gulf.

Sources, however, reported bloody clashes between government troops and demonstrators who had taken to the streets to celebrate the monarch's departure. An early unconfirmed press report spoke of several hundred casualties.

Baritone, pianist concert today

Guest baritone Gerald Crawford and pianist James Magsig will perform in concert at 8 tonight in Hill Hall auditorium.

The program will feature Schumann's song cycle "Dichterliebe" and Ned Rorem's "War Scenes." Songs by Charles Ives and a Mozart aria are also on the program.

Crawford, associate professor of music in applied voice at Western Illinois University, has been a member of the New York City Opera Company and has performed principal roles with the New Orleans Opera and the Rochester Opera Under the Stars.

Magsig is an associate professor of music at Western Illinois University.
