McDonald's brings Joy to Vermont kin

By DONNA TOMPKINS
Staff Writer

While many people were enjoying turkey during Thanksgiving and Christmas, Phyllis Joy was munching away on a Big Mac in Vermont with her family, thanks to a trip provided by McDonald's.

Joy, a secretary in UNC's audiovisual department, flew via United Airlines to northern Vermont not once but twice to be with her family for four days each time as part of McDonald's "Bring your family home for the holidays" publicity gimmick.

Joy, or "Big Mac" as she laughingly referred to herself, said she thought she was flown up twice to make her prize comparable to those won by larger families.

"I think if they had had a family of 10 they would have flown them all up. Since there was only one of me, maybe that's why they flew me twice."

Joy said she found out about her holiday-trip-to-come last summer from her son, his wife and their three daughters.

"I got a call from them early in August, I guess it was. At first I thought they were kidding, but they said no, they were serious. I really couldn't believe it—not until I got there—that I had actually won."

She said she had filled out "a handful" of McDonald's trip applications in July when she stopped in Virginia on her way home to Durham after a vacation, but she never thought she'd win.

Actually, she didn't. But her daughter-in-law did win a drawing in Vermont and as part of the prize agreement Joy was flown north to be with her family.

"I've never won anything like that before, nor has anyone in my family," she said. "If it had not been for this trip I probably would not have been able to see my family because I usually only see them once a year."

Joy's trip package included a ticket to Vermont and back, twice, with meals on the plane, and a dinner for the whole family at McDonald's.

"It was great," she said. "The kids really enjoyed it. They could eat all they wanted to. It's really a wonder they didn't get sick."

Joy said she really enjoyed her trips to Vermont—even the blizzard that piled more than three feet of snow on the ground during Christmas.

"We got in some skiing and all. I really did enjoy it. It's very gorgeous up there. You just can't imagine. My family gave me a heavy ski jacket and I went out to shovel snow."

"It was a great thing," she said. "McDonald's is very family-oriented and it was a real treat for my grandchildren and for me, too."

State commission: UNC must pay taxes

By JOAN BRAFFORD
Staff Writer

The state's property tax commission ruled Wednesday that UNC will have to pay tax on the Carolina Inn and portions of two other properties to Chapel Hill, Carrboro and Orange County. The University has not decided whether to appeal the ruling.

"It will at least be next week and it may be that we will wait a month," said John Temple, vice chancellor of business and finance. "We may want to talk to our trustees," he said.

The commission's report was sent to the Orange County tax supervisor, Bill Laws, on Thursday. "I haven't figured out all they said," Laws said.

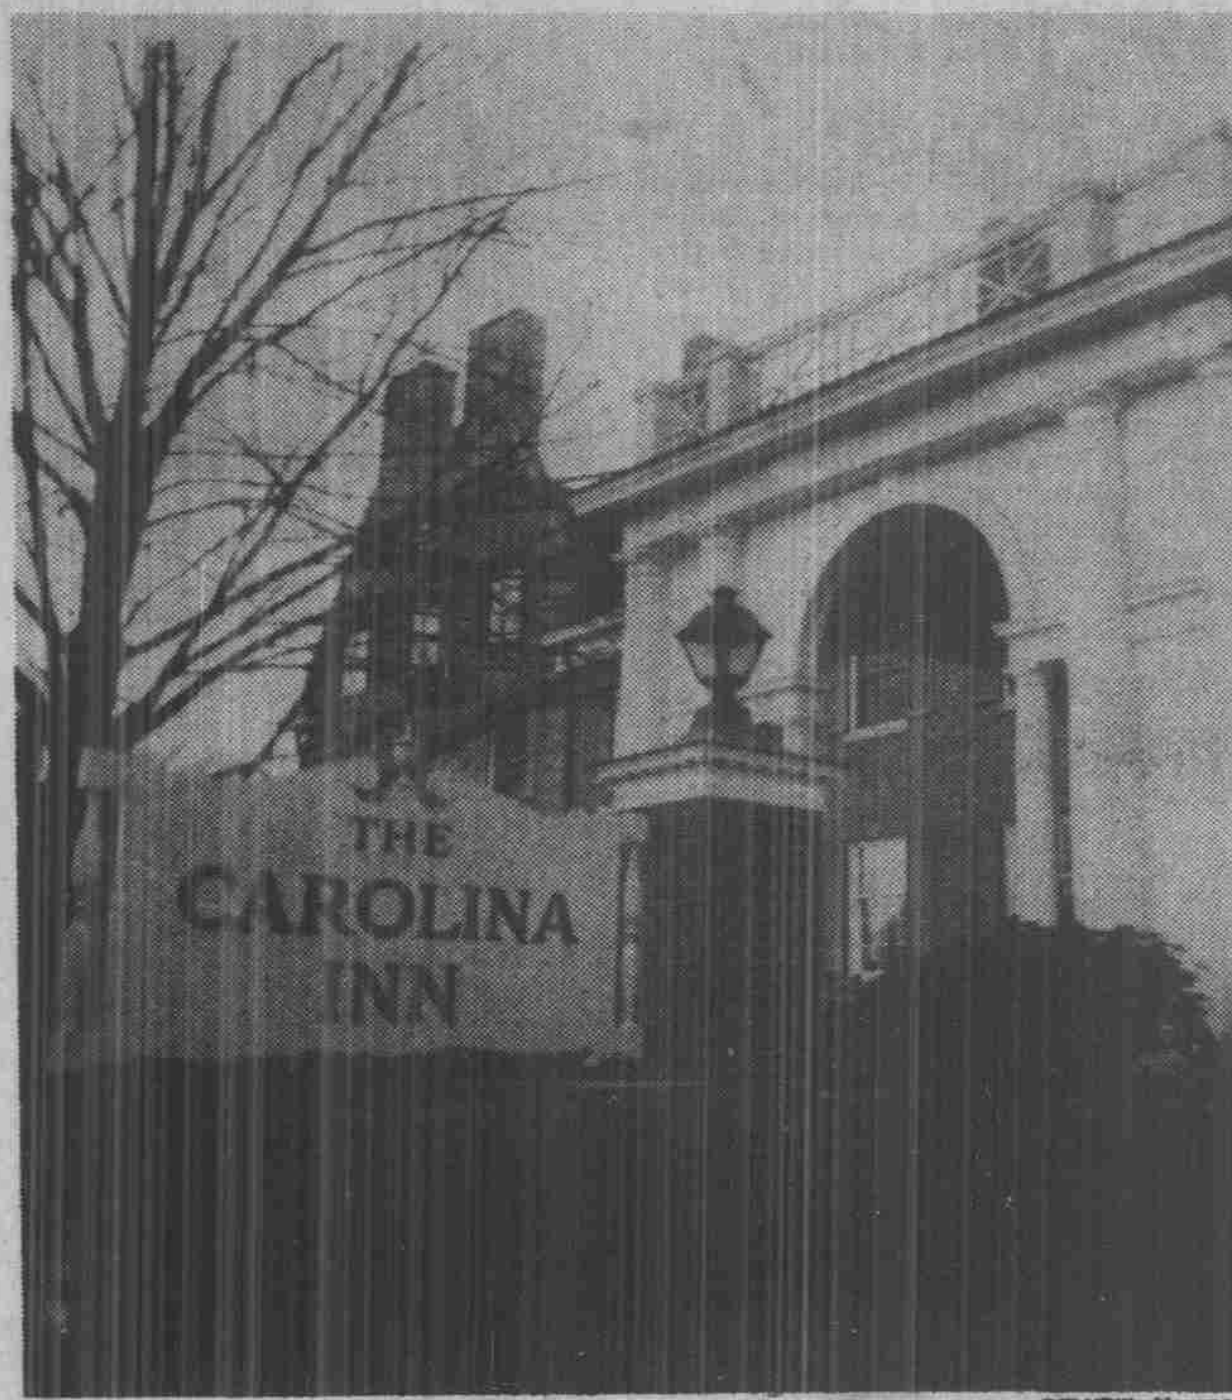

The commission ruled Wednesday that UNC property used for commercial rather than educational purposes may be taxed. The Carolina Inn, the first floor of the Hill Building on Franklin Street, which houses the Carolina Coffee Shop and two clothing stores, and portions of the Horace Williams Airport property are subject to taxation by the three governments.

Other UNC property, valued at $30 million, is exempt from taxation because it is being used for educational purposes, the University is not using the property, or the University is holding it for expansion, the commission's report said.

The University appealed the 1974 taxation of property valued at $40 million to the commission. The ruling Wednesday said only $3 million of the property is taxable. The Carolina Inn is valued at $2,378,700 for tax purposes and the other properties are valued at less than $1 million.

The University will have to pay $40,000 to $50,000 in property taxes on the Carolina Inn, Temple said. "We'd have to evaluate what they've said on the other properties. What they've said is that part of the property is taxable."

"The Hill Building on Franklin Street—the bottom is rented and the top is used by the University. The bottom is subject to taxation and the top is not. We'd have to take the value of the

Sophs declare war on majors

Declaring a major. For some people it's easy. Either they know exactly what area interests them, or they just don't care. But for those sophomores who don't know and do care, declaring a major can be a frustrating experience.

Major Declaration Days, scheduled for Jan. 29-Feb. 9, are designed to help. Sponsored by the General College and Student Government, Major Declaration Days give second-semester sophomores who are unsure of their preferences a chance to talk with their advisers and with students and professors in the fields they are considering.

The days are highlighted by a two-day Major Mart, scheduled for 1-4 p.m. Jan. 31 and Feb. 1 in Great Hall, Carolina Union. Representatives from the various schools and departments will be available to answer questions about required courses and opportunities in that major.

Literature about the major also will be available.

A limited number of the handout A Guide to Major Possibilities, which were printed last year for the first Major Declaration Days, will be distributed to students at the mart. A mimeographed insert updating the guide also will be available.

Each school, department and curriculum also has been encouraged to offer programs for prospective majors during the declaration days.

A second reason for the days is to encourage sophomores to declare a major early enough in the semester for them to be assigned to their new advisers before preregistration for fall classes in early April.

Any student who already is certain of the major he will declare may simply fill out a declaration from with the check-out secretary outside 308 South Building beginning Monday. All other students may make 10-minute appointments with their General College advisers, also beginning Monday.

A student will not be pressured into declaring a major if he still is badly confused, but students who are considering transferring to one of the professional schools have a better chance of being accepted into that school as a sophomore from General College than as a junior from Arts and Sciences.

Any student who declares a major and later changes his mind usually can transfer to another major without difficulty.

Students planning to declare a double major also should be ready to do so during their appointment. Students' records will be forwarded to their advisers in their new majors by March 10.

'DTH' distribution sites

The most recent Daily Tar Heel readership survey found that while the typical UNC student looks for a Tar Heel more than four out of every five publishing days, he or she has difficulty finding a copy as often as twice a week.

Part of the problem, according to the survey group from the business school, is that many students are not aware of the DTH distribution points. Here is an up-to-date list of all drop locations, with an accompanying map and the normal number of copies left at each box. (More copies are left at the Y-Court and the Union when the paper is late off the presses):

UNC board request 20 percent higher than Hunt proposes

By KATHY CURRY

In his budget recommendations for the 1979-81 biennium, Gov. Jim Hunt Monday called for a $933 million appropriation to the 16-campus UNC system. The governor's suggestion fell 20 percent below the amount requested by the UNC Board of Governors.

Hunt's recommendation represents a 6 percent funding increase for the university system over current levels.

Hearings on UNC's budget get underway today before a joint session of the Senate Base Budget Committee on Education and the House Appropriations Committee on Education.

"Counseling the limitations of available resources, we think Hunt's recommendations are fair," said L. Felix Joyner, UNC vice president for finance. "But we may ask the appropriations committee for a supplemental request to restore certain projects or programs."

Hunt chopped the board's request for new programs by half, from $66.2 million to $33 million. The governor cut the capital improvements request from $117.1 million to $72.7 million, and trimmed the continuing operations budget from $683 million to $681 million.

Wood slices hand; not serious

UNC basketball player Al Wood tripped and fell through a plate-glass window Thursday night in Eringhaus Dorm, slightly injuring two fingers and his head.

A spokesman for the team said the injuries will probably not affect his ability to play in Saturday's game with Maryland.

"He cut two fingers on his left hand and they sewed them up," said Rick Brewer, UNC sports information director.

Brewer said Wood, a sophomore from Gray, Ga., would remain in the hospital Thursday night with ice on his hand. "We certainly expect him to play," he said. "His fingers will probably be taped like Walter Davis' were."

Sgt. Walter Dunn of the Campus Police said, "He (Wood) was running to the dorm and tripped on a step and fell through the window."

Wood was taken directly to the Student Health Service from Eringhaus about 8:45 p.m. At about 10:30 p.m. Wood appeared to be in good spirits while he received the stitches.

Wood joined teammates Mike O'Koren and Dave Colescott in the infirmary Thursday night, both of whom are nursing injuries.
