

Forward Tony Price leads Penn

Down to cases

The last weekend of NCAA basketball competition starts Saturday with Penn meeting Michigan State at 2 p.m. and Indiana State facing DePaul at 4 p.m. The final is Monday night.

To get to the Final Four, Penn defeated Iona, Carolina, Syracuse and St. John's in the East regional, and Michigan State demolished Lamar, Louisiana State and Notre Dame in the Midwest.

In the Midwest, Indiana State got past Virginia Tech, Oklahoma and Arkansas. DePaul beat Southern Cal, Marquette and UCLA in the West.

Penn, the first Ivy League team to reach a Final Four since Princeton during the Bill Bradley years, is led by 6-foot-7 forward Tony Price, who was the region's most valuable player. Michigan State has Magic—Earvin "Magic" Johnson—on its side in its first trip to the national semifinals since 1957, when the Spartans finished fourth and UNC won the title. Carolina beat Michigan State this season by one point.

Until this year, no one outside of Terre Haute knew where Indiana State was, but Larry Bird makes the Sycamores the team to beat. The national player of the year led ISU to a 32-0 record this year. Ray Meyer has his first Final Four team in 37 years at DePaul and his first "blue-chip" freshman in about 15 years in Mark Aguirre.

The games will be televised on Channel 28.
