

UNC likely to appeal discrimination ruling

By JIM HUMMEL
Staff Writer

There is a good chance the University will file a petition to appeal a ruling of reverse discrimination handed down last month by the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, Andrew Vanore, chief deputy state attorney general, said Monday.

The court ruled the University was guilty of reverse discrimination by requiring minority representation on the Honor Court and Campus Governing Council.

"As of the present time there has been no definite decision on whether to appeal," Vanore said. "But I think we are going to petition for a writ of certiorari, (which would allow an appeal). As I told the Chancellor (Ferebee Taylor) and President (William Friday), if for any reason we didn't want to exercise our right we don't have to."

Vanore filed a stay of judgment last month that allowed former CGC minority representative Pam Edwards to keep her position. Edwards' post was filled by Allen Patterson under J.B. Kelly's administration.

Because the stay was granted, Patterson will be able to keep his seat until a decision is reached.

"It can take anywhere from two to eight months for the Supreme Court to decide whether or not they will even hear the case," Vanore said. "Then it could take another nine months after that to decide."

The University has 90 days from Feb. 3, 1979 to file the petition.

"We are still trying to set up a meeting with the interested parties," Taylor said. "Some decision will have to be made soon."

The suit was filed in 1974 by two white students, Lawrence Uzzell and Robert Arrington, before the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in the Bakke reverse discrimination case.

UNC President William Friday said he felt the court's decision would be strictly applicable to the specific case involving Uzzell and Arrington and would not affect other areas of the University.

"Very few of these cases spill over into other areas," Vanore said. "I don't know much about what could happen with the University but it could have an effect on the public schools in general."

Vanore said there are public elementary and secondary schools minority representation provisions in a number of areas.

Daniel Pollitt, Kenan professor of law, said such cases are appearing as a result of the Bakke decision.

"One case leads to another," Pollitt said last month. "Because it was a split decision there could be grounds for appeal."

Another reverse discrimination case involving the University was settled this week, with both parties agreeing to settle out of court. Two white students charged the UNC law school with reverse discrimination but did not take the case to court because the admissions policy has been changed.

The state has agreed to pay the plaintiffs an undisclosed amount of money.

News In Brief

Pan American jet ordered down in Syria

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP)—A Pan American jumbo jet bound from New York to Saudi Arabia was ordered to land in Damascus, Syria, today for allegedly violating Syrian airspace, but it was allowed to resume its flight three hours later, officials reported.

In New York, Pan Am officials said normal flight plans and international aviation agreements permit its airplanes to fly over Damascus on the route between New York and Dharan, Saudi Arabia.

The State Department officials said there was no indication the incident was related in any way to Syria's opposition to this afternoon's signing of an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

Publication of H-Bomb recipe stopped

MILWAUKEE (AP)—A federal judge issued a preliminary injunction Monday barring The Progressive magazine from publishing an article on hydrogen bombs, after the magazine declined his offer to appoint mediators in its dispute with the federal government.

The government had asked U.S. District Judge Robert W. Warren to block publication on grounds the article would reveal secret information that could lead to nuclear weapons proliferation.

"We are definitely going to appeal," said Erwin Knoll, editor of the Madison-based magazine.

Nationwide trucking strike possible

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Teamsters union, raising the possibility of a nationwide trucking strike within a week, filed suit Monday in a move calculated to undercut Carter administration attempts to halt a walkout.

Lawyers for the nation's largest union filed their suit in U.S. District Court as negotiators for the two sides resumed contract talks and Teamster members in widely scattered locals voted overwhelmingly to authorize a strike at midnight Saturday.

Nuclear plant bomb threat 'graffiti'

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—Tennessee Valley Authority officials acknowledged Monday that they dismissed a bomb threat against a nuclear power plant in January as "graffiti" and did not search for a bomb. The FBI also took no action, an agent said.

The Birmingham Post-Herald said in its Monday editions that a note threatening to blow up the Browns Ferry Nuclear Plant in northwest Alabama was found Jan. 11, written on a restroom wall in the plant's administration building.

An FBI spokesman said they received a call that implied the threat, but plant officials said the reactor area was not searched. "Where do you want us to start?" they said. "That is a huge plant. No one saw anything serious in it."

not be the test. It's just one factor in looking at the whole process." Jernigan also contended that the Elections Board illegally certified the run-off vote 168 hours after the election rather than the 96 hours specified in election laws. But the court said that by ordering a new election within 96 hours and then rescinding its opinion later, the board complied with the law.

The opinion also suggested changes in the election laws. The opinion stated that the General Election Laws should be amended to require the polls to open at 9 a.m. to increase student voting opportunity.

The second suggestion for change was that the Elections Board chairperson should handle each primary election with the expectation that there will be a runoff. "In this election, the Elections Board seemed to be caught off guard by the runoff," the opinion stated.

The Elections Board will meet today to set a date for a public hearing on elections law reform. Linker said the board will consider many possibilities, including computer voting.

BSM

"We did every conceivable fund-raiser you could think of—parties, doughnut and bake sales, and we got help from fraternities and sororities," Johnson said. "Omega Psi Phi put us over for the last payment."

"There were times when we didn't think we were going to make it and things looked grim, but we pulled it together," said Gregory Pittman, BSM treasurer.

"I would hate to see any organization go through what we did," Johnson said. "It takes a lot out of you and we like to devote our time to doing services for the community."

The payment schedule to the CGC was fair and the CGC was cooperative and showed faith in the BSM, Johnson said.

"They have done an excellent job," Black said. "When the BSM did not pay back the loan last year they were charged with a 6 percent interest which is what the money would have made if we had invested it."

"I know how hard it was to pay it up, but they were determined and have done a really good job," Black said.

"As far as the CGC budget hearings this spring, paying off the loan won't give them an edge, but people will probably have a better attitude toward the BSM."

The University Police also are towing fewer cars. Abbot Mason, UNC parking control coordinator, said a streamlining of ticket collection procedure may be responsible for the drop. It now takes one to two months to contact a person to collect a parking fine, compared to seven to nine months before the new policy, Mason said.

University police tow about 10 cars daily, and every car that is towed costs the department $10 to $15 in personnel and administrative costs, he said.

"Generally, we use towing as a measure of last resort to see if we can't force a change in bad parking habits. If he's been towed, he'll think twice about parking illegally again," Mason said.

But there are those who continue to park illegally. "Some people are towed 10 to 15 times," said Mason. He said one freshman's car was towed by the campus police 18 times last year, costing him $650. "He never would learn his lesson," said Mason. "It didn't seem to phase him the slightest bit."

Spokesmen for both Chapel Hill and campus police said they anticipated more parking violations when the 548 spaces in the Student Union parking lot are moved for construction of a new library this summer.

Towing fees for cars towed by Chapel Hill police are $15 from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., $20 from 6 p.m. to midnight and $25 from midnight to 7 a.m.
