

Castro attacks U.S. policies at summit

Fidel Castro accuses U.S. ...of sabotage attempts

HAVANA (AP)—Cuban President Fidel Castro launched a summit meeting of the Non-Aligned Movement Monday with a sweeping attack on U.S. global policies and an accusation that the United States had made "hectic diplomatic efforts" to sabotage the meeting.

In a fiery speech before representatives of more than 100 nations, Castro assailed American policies in the Middle East, southern Africa, Indochina and Latin America.

The chief of the U.S. Interest Section in Cuba, Wayne Smith, walked out of the sprawling new convention hall a few minutes after Castro began his address.

At the time, the Cuban leader was recalling past U.S. assassination attempts against Cuban leaders and saying Washington was "still interfering in our affairs."

Castro also said China was guilty of uncivilized behavior toward the rest of the world—prompting the Chinese mission chief to storm out of the meeting hall.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Butros Ghali demanded an opportunity to respond immediately to what he called Castro's "pernicious" remarks denouncing the Camp David accords.

But the summit moderator, Sri Lankan President J.R. Jayawardene, said such rebuttal should come at a later time, and he denied the request to rhythmic applause from the 1,400 delegates in the hall, who included heads of government and heads of state from some 60 countries.

His decision was overruled after Castro, as host, was unanimously elected president of the movement. The Cuban leader said, "We do not want anyone to claim we fear a debate or that we don't have confidence in the soundness of our arguments."

Ghali said he was "disconcerted and shocked" by Castro's attack on Egypt for signing the treaty with Israel.

"We are the only Arab people effectively fighting for Palestine at this time," he said, and Castro's criticism was "unworthy of a non-aligned state against another non-aligned state."

Castro, pounding the podium, accused the United States of engaging in "feverish diplomatic contacts" to try to modify a heavily anti-American draft declaration that Cuba has circulated among the non-aligned membership.

"Yankee imperialists and their old and new allies didn't want this conference to be held in Cuba," Castro said. He added that the U.S. effort included "dirty scheming" to try to depict Cuba as a tool of Soviet policy.

Saying Cuba is a good friend of the Soviet Union, Castro nevertheless insisted that "we don't always even agree with our best friends." But, he added, to ignore the Soviet role in defeating colonialism "is to ignore history itself."

Castro's speech began a five-day summit meeting that is expected to produce a tug-of-war between radical and moderate forces for control of the Non-Aligned Movement, which was founded in the mid-1950s as an independent force in global politics.

Castro's speech, frequently interrupted by applause, also expressed full support for the Arab struggle against Israel.

He said, however, that Cuba is not an anti-Semitic country.

FTC requires energy tags on 7 appliances

The Associated Press

The federal government is putting the finishing touches on a plan to make it easier for consumers to compare energy efficiency when they shop for appliances.

Regulations expected to be issued later this month will require energy labels on seven major appliances: refrigerators, freezers, dishwashers, clothes washers, water heaters, room air conditioners and furnaces.

The rules were drawn up by the Federal Trade Commission after more than a year of study and public hearings. They stem from the 1957 Energy Policy and Conservation Act.

Andrew Wolf, a commission attorney who has been working on the program, said the black and yellow "Energy Guide" tags should start appearing in the stores in January, after manufacturers test products and prepare labels.

All the appliances except the air conditioners and furnaces will be labeled with an estimated annual operating cost—based on a national average electricity rate—and with the range of operating costs for similar competing models.

Air conditioners and furnaces will be marked slightly differently, Wolf said, because their use varies so widely depending on geographical location.

Their labels will include an Energy Efficiency Ratio, or EER, already in use by many manufacturers on a voluntary basis. The EER tells you how much heating or cooling you get for a given unit of energy; the higher the EER, the more efficient the appliance. Wolf said charts listing usage and utility rates will be provided on the labels so consumers can make their own cost calculations.

The labels should help shoppers get the best value for their dollars. Using the labels, you can compare total costs; the model that seems more expensive initially may wind up cheaper in the long run because of lower utility bills.

The labels also should encourage energy conservation. Energy consumption, however, depends not only on the appliance but also on the user.

Seventy percent of the energy we use in our homes goes for heating and cooling. 20 percent is consumed in producing hot water, and the remaining 10 percent goes into lighting, cooking and running small appliances.

Small steps can add up to substantial savings. The Department of Energy notes that most water heaters are set for 140 degrees Fahrenheit or higher. Unless you have a dishwasher, you probably don't need your water that hot.

A setting of 120 degrees can provide adequate hot water for most families and cutting the temperature 20 degrees can cut energy consumption by 18 percent. To determine temperature, draw water from the heater through the bottom faucet and test it with a thermometer.

Other energy-saving suggestions from the government include:

- Use cold water to operate your food disposal unit. Cold water often is recommended for this type of appliance. Not only does it save energy, but it helps solidify grease so it can be ground up and washed away.

- Consider refrigerators and freezers that can be defrosted manually. The extra effort could cut electricity consumption by more than 5 percent.
