Guardsmen, police regain prison control

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP)—National Guardsmen and a police SWAT team recaptured the burning New Mexico State Prison on Sunday to free all the remaining hostages and end a 36-hour bloodbath that left at least 27 inmates dead and 50 persons hospitalized.

State Criminal Justice Secretary Adolph Saenz said the death toll had reached 27 "not counting the gymnasium," which had been burning for more than 12 hours.

"The violence was incredible," Saenz said. One of the prisoners was beheaded.

Carter to propose secret intelligence court

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration intends to propose that a new, secret court be given power to authorize covert government intelligence agents to break into the homes and offices and open the mail of certain Americans.

But with President Carter's proposal still at least five days from being made public, debate already has begun over just which Americans should be targets of such intrusions.

UNC panel to discuss Soviets

In an attempt to explain recent events in the oil-rich Persian Gulf area and their implications for the United States, the UNC Russian and Eastern European studies program will sponsor a panel discussion, "The Soviets in Afghanistan and the American Response," at 8 p.m. Tuesday in 104 Howell Hall.

Richard Lowenthal, a specialist in Soviet and world communist affairs, and professor emeritus at the Free University of Berlin, will open the discussion with an evaluation of the situation. UNC professors Edward Azar, Robert Rupen, and Herbert Bodman will comment on Lowenthal's statement.

Azar said the discussion is intended to explain not only what has happened in the Persian Gulf area, but also the reasons behind the events and their influence on American policy. Azar said the panel will evaluate the "Carter Doctrine" and its implications for future relations in the Persian Gulf area.

CAMP THUNDERBIRD

Excellent summer counseling opportunities for men and women who are interested in serving boys and girls ages 7-16, guiding them in their physical, mental and spiritual development. Only those persons who will dedicate their wholehearted efforts to help each individual child develop his or her potential should apply. One must have ability to teach in one or more of our specialized activities. College students, teachers, and coaches should apply. CAMP THUNDERBIRD, located 17 miles south of Charlotte, N.C., is an ACA accredited camp member, specializing in water sports (sailing, water skiing, swimming and canoeing), yet an added emphasis is placed on the land sports (general athletics, tennis, golf, archery, riflery and back packing). Horseback riding, white-water canoeing and tripping are extras in our excellent program. For further information write or call G. William Climer, Jr., Director, Camp Thunderbird, Route 4, Box 166-A, Clover, S.C., 29710 (803-831-2121).

UNC student presidents meet with HEW

By LYNN CASEY
Staff Writer

"The Department of Health, Education and Welfare needs to be more sensitive to people and not numbers and statistics," said UNC Student Body President J.B. Kelly after meeting in Washington last week to discuss the UNC-HEW dispute with department officials.

Kelly and 11 other student body presidents from the UNC system attended the two-hour meeting. The students told officials from HEW that the federal government should not eliminate freedom of choice for students attending public colleges in North Carolina.

The purpose of the meeting was to inform the student body presidents of what was happening between HEW and UNC, and why and it was happening, Kelly said.

Jeffrey Champagne, a lawyer in the HEW Office of Civil Rights, told the students that one of the department's goals is for the state to increase black enrollment by 150 percent during the next five years.

Another goal is the enhancement of the five predominantly black colleges to draw more whites, Champagne said.

Cheryl Armwood, student body vice president at North Carolina A&T State University, said she was concerned that while as many as half of the state's black students may be steered into predominantly white schools, the predominantly black schools may fail to get an equal number of white students to keep up their enrollment.

Armwood also said that black students are concerned that the federal desegregation criteria may result in black colleges losing their identities.

"They are looking for a new balance in the system but overlooking the identity of the schools," Kelly said.

Kelly said Champagne also told them that HEW would like to end the curriculum duplication in the 16-campus system.

"I don't think HEW understands the entire ramifications of the criteria it's set for UNC," Kelly said.

Kelly questioned whether all students go to a university because of its curriculum.

"What they want to achieve is noble, but whether it's realistic is questionable," Kelly said.

An administrative hearing is scheduled for May 19 to determine whether the University should lose about $90 million in annual federal aid for failure to meet HEW's desegregation criteria.

"I think the dialogue between the students and the HEW staff was very helpful and should be continued," Kelly said.

The UNC Association of Student Governments, of which Kelly is president, requested the meeting with HEW officials. Previous meetings had been scheduled but not carried out.

"The UNC Association of Student Governments had met with UNC President William C. Friday and kept up with the issue from a UNC viewpoint," Kelly said. "But we felt a real necessity to meet with HEW to get their viewpoint."

Whitted up for re-election

Richard Whitted, chairman of the Orange County Board of Commissioners, announced Friday that he is seeking reelection.

Whitted, 35, has served on the board since 1972. He joins incumbent Don Willhoit and Ben Lloyd, a conservative northern Orange County dairy farmer who led the fight against the November county bond referendum, in the race for two commissioner seats.

The differences between Whitted, who is regarded as a liberal member of the board, and Lloyd could generate a heated campaign. Whitted was a strong supporter of the $20.4 million November bond referendum, the most ambitious in county history, which was defeated by Orange County voters.

Whitted said balancing rising service costs and taxes will be a particularly difficult task facing the commissioners.

Whitted also said he would work to make joint planning between Orange County and towns within the county a reality.

Orange County and Chapel Hill have discussed joint planning for several years but have yet to resolve the issue. Discussions on joint planning between the county and the town are continuing.

Whitted touched upon another subject which has been the source of conflict between Chapel Hill and the county. The town has argued that the county should be chiefly responsible for human services funding. Whitted said he would try to bring more coordination and cooperation between town and county in human services funding.

Sit-ins commemorated

By DAVID TEAGUE
Staff Writer

The atmosphere was reminiscent of the 1960s civil rights movement as authors, professors, and one-time political activists gathered last week at the Carolina Union to commemorate the Greensboro lunch counter sit-ins 20 years ago.

"The subject of the teach-ins was analysis of social conflicts and social justice in this country," said Leon Fink, a history professor at UNC. Fink is an organizer of Critical Perspectives Forum, a monthly forum on political issues, which sponsored the teach-in.

Topics discussed at the sit-in ranged from the sit-in itself to the history of the Ku Klux Klan, its present revival and the anti-klan march in Greensboro held over the weekend.

One of the speakers for the teach-in was Allan Trelease, history professor at UNC-Greensboro and author of White Terror, a history of the first Klan. He spoke on the history of the Klan, tracing its activities from its first rising in 1868 to its revival in the 1920s.

"The goals of the first Klan were to destroy the Republican Party and Black Reconstruction, and generally to keep blacks in their place," Trelease said. "It died out because it was more spectacular than effective. The second rising of the Klan interested more people because its list of hates was broader."

The original Klan hated Jews, Communists, Catholics and blacks, he said. Membership in the Klan sagged in the late 1920s, and the Klan disappeared during World War II.

Pat Bryant, a journalist and member of the staff which organized the Greensboro march, spoke on the media and the Klan, pointing out that the Klan believed that advancement of blacks was done at the expense of whites.

"We have a situation where the Klan is rising up, shooting people," Bryant said. "They are pushing the idea that for the blacks to gain something, whites must lose something."

William Chafe, author of a just-released history of the Greensboro sit-ins, spoke about the history of the event and its significance.

Two of the most well-received speakers were C.P. Ellis, a former Klan member who is now an organizer for a predominantly black union, and Anne Braden, a civil rights activist for four decades. Ellis spoke of his experiences with the Klan and the events that led to his joining and leaving the Klan. Braden spoke of the civil rights movement.

Other speakers included Nell Irvin Painter, a visiting history professor from the University of Pennsylvania, who spoke on the Communist Party and race relations in the South; Tony Whitehead, a UNC professor of health education, who spoke on black poverty in the South; and William Kunstler, a civil libertarian lawyer known for his defense of the Chicago Seven and of Joann Little.

Kunstler urged blacks and whites to get together in a united movement. "If we cannot do that, we're all going under," he said.

More vaccines expected today

Student Health Services gave red measles vaccinations to 2,000 students last week and will continue today when 500-1,000 more doses arrive from the state Department of Health in Raleigh, an SHS physician said Sunday.

The health service ran out of vaccines Friday.

Dr. James McCutchan said students should call the SHS infirmary at 966-2281 before coming to receive a vaccination because the additional doses may not arrive until late today.

No new cases of red measles have been reported since an outbreak of the disease last week in one UNC student and 18 other persons in Orange County and the Chapel Hill-Carrboro school system.

investigation, suggesting the possibility of entrapment occurs when a defendant who was not otherwise predisposed to commit a crime is drawn into it by an undercover law enforcement tactic. If proved, it can cause a case to be thrown out of court.

Sources said that FBI director William Webster and top Justice Department lawyers closely policed the probe and that the FBI was never the first to suggest bribes to public figures. One source familiar with the investigation said flatly that videotape evidence will show there was no entrapment.

"Informants and lawyers who came to them brought in officials seeking bribes," he said.

The reports prompted a weekend conference of Republican congressmen, governors and other officials in Easton, Md., to urge an immediate, full, impartial investigation of the charges by congressional ethics committees.

Rep. Charles E. Bennett, D-Fla., chairman of the House ethics committee, said Sunday the panel will expand an investigation already under way to cover the FBI allegations.

"We've already had a continuing investigation of one or more of those people going on for months," Bennett said.

"The accusations that were made were similar to those investigated by the FBI, but the FBI was not involved in the committee's work," he said.

No charges have been filed, or arrests made, but several sources said federal officials were planning to present their evidence to one or more grand juries, perhaps as early as this week.

"We have learned something from the '60s," Vivian told 46 marchers at the Communist rally. "We must fight for what we want. We gave the 70s to the politicians. But the 80s belong to us—a new, peaceful, non-violent movement that will overcome racial injustice."

Both city officials and march organizers were pleased by the demonstration's orderly progression through almost-deserted streets.

Although the Southern Christian Leadership Conference assumed the coveted lead position, the bulk of demonstrators consisted of various communist and socialist organizations with a smattering of special interest groups, anti-racist organizations and non-aligned supporters.

Despite the CWP's expulsion from the march after their refusal to commit themselves on a weapons ban, several large groups of the communists participated in the parade. One group carried a large banner that read "Remember the Greensboro Massacre."

The CWP caused the nearest thing to a confrontation when they tried to lead the demonstration. Twice during the march, CWP members worked their way to the front of the parade, chanting "Death to the Klan" and "Avenge the CWP 5," referring to the five persons killed last November.

"I want to send a message to Jimmy Carter—there ain't going to be no reinstatement of the draft," shouted Wilmington 10 leader Ben Chavis who was first greeted at the coliseum rally with a standing ovation. "We're not going to fight no more wars of capitalism; we're not going to fight no more wars for imperialism. We're not going to be drafted into the freedom struggle."

"We must blot out capitalism and imperialism once and for all," said Chavis.
