Hospital officials regret woman was denied room

By LUCY HOOD
 Staff Writer

The sister and mother-in-law of a woman who was denied a room in N.C. Memorial Hospital as she was about to have a baby Tuesday afternoon met Wednesday with hospital officials who apologized for the event.

Kathy Crawford and Jessie Robinson, the sister and mother-in-law of Chapel Hill resident Linda Robinson, met with Dr. Robert C. Cefalo and another hospital official. Crawford said the officials apologized for what happened and that they were very understanding. The officials said a board meeting would be held to make sure that such events did not happen in the future.

Linda Robinson, 20, checked into the hospital through the emergency room about 3 p.m. Tuesday and was sent to the labor and delivery area, Crawford said. The three women and Mrs. Robinson's husband, David, waited at the hospital for about 2½ hours before leaving for Durham County General Hospital. They left after a nurse told them the hospital did not have room for them, Crawford said.

On the way to Durham, Mrs. Robinson gave birth to a 7-pound, 4-ounce girl. Crawford helped deliver the baby.

Hospital officials, after refusing to talk about the incident because they said Mrs. Robinson had a doctor-patient relationship, released a statement Wednesday which read, "We would like to emphasize that she was denied because of a bed shortage."

During the 2½ hour wait, Mrs. Robinson was examined twice by a physician and his assistants. Both times they concluded she was not in labor. Crawford said after the second examination, the physician suggested Mrs. Robinson be given a prescription for sleeping pills and that she go home to rest. In addition, Crawford said the physician refused to give Mrs. Robinson a bed to lie down on and suggested she walk around, instead.

The hospital has denied this last charge, however. "She was encouraged to remain if it would make her feel more comfortable," the statement read. "If her condition changed, they (the doctors) would act immediately."

Friday last day to drop courses

Friday is the deadline for dropping a course or declaring one pass-fail.

Students wishing to drop a course or receive a pass-fail grade in a course, instead of a letter grade, must complete the proper forms and return them to Hanes Hall by 5 p.m. Friday afternoon.

To drop a course this semester, a student must get an adviser's signature on a drop form available from the office of his college or adviser and return that form along with his registration card from the course's instructor to the basement of Hanes Hall.

To take a course pass-fail, students in the College of Arts and Sciences only need to complete a form and return it to the first floor of Hanes Hall. Students in General College must have their advisers sign the form.
