

Heels hanging with big boys

Down at the University of Alabama, where national prestige in football is as common as renditions of "Roll Tide, Roll," winning the first five games of a season is no big deal. Crimson Tide faithful expect it, just as they expect to see Legion Field vendors hawk hot dogs and soft drinks on Saturday afternoons.

When your coach, Paul "Bear" Bryant, owns 300 coaching victories, you'd better be ranked highly or you ought to start looking around to see what kind of evil things you've done to the sportswriters and broadcasters who cast votes in the Associated Press poll every week.

The Tide took top spot in the AP poll this week, probably for the 3,000th time, but below the Tide at No. 8, ahead of teams like Ohio State, Nebraska and Oklahoma, was North Carolina, which made the Top 10 last week for the first time since 1948.

What is a repeat performance for Alabama is a mere audition for Carolina.

As they approach this week's game with Wake Forest in Winston-Salem, the Tar Heels have a chance to win their first five games of the season for the first time since 1948, when Charlie Justice and company went 9-1-1 after five straight. Thirty-two years is a long time.

For Carolina coach Dick Crum, there isn't much pressure—he admits that—but an awareness of what a win on Saturday would mean.

UNC coach Dick Crum (above) has been pleased with the steadily improving performance of his sophomore quarterback Rod Elkins (left). Elkins was named ACC Offensive Back of the Week for his play in Carolina's 33-0 win over Georgia Tech Saturday.

Bill Fields

"It goes back to the theory of playing them one at a time," Crum says. "Maybe it's a quirk that Carolina hasn't won its first five games in a long time. It's going to happen sometime—maybe this year, maybe next year. That's good stuff to write about, but as far as the football team is concerned, it's not important."

But in many ways, the Carolina-Wake Forest game is important. Not only would a victory erase the flat memory of last season, when the Tar Heels, also 4-0, proceeded to go 1-3-1 the next five weeks, but it would catapult the Tar Heels over a barrier.

Crum insists too many games are called pivotal, whether they are the first game of the season, the fifth or the next-to-last, but he knows some games are worth more than others. Last season's opener against South Carolina was one of those games. UNC shut out the Gamecocks 28-0, and for Crum, whose first Tar Heel team the year before went 5-6 and put many fans in a quandary, the game showed many people he could coach and could produce a winner.

Players and coaches say they have learned from last year's slump. "Everybody looks back on last year and realizes we quit trying to improve," says tight end Mike Chatham. "We had always beaten Wake Forest and we felt they would just lay down and let us beat them."

Defensive coordinator Denny Marcin says, "They know why it happened last year. It's a mental thing, really. They are taking more pride this year."

"The team is a whole lot wiser," Chatham says. "It has happened to us, so we know from experience it can happen. We've worked hard to get off to a good start; we know we can't let up against anybody."

As the Tar Heels rise in the national poll, so do the urges of opponents to see them slide just as quickly. While Carolina is working to find the new experience of five victories, it's also finding out about life near the top. To Crum that means pressure only if a team is at the top.

"I don't think (the ranking) is bothering them very much," Crum says of his players. "I tell them to look at the basketball team. They are in the top five every year and they don't think anything about it. When you're No. 1, then you start feeling the pressure."

Dean Smith isn't one to talk much about rankings, either, which makes one wonder if it's written into their contracts not to discuss them. But, seriously, the characters of the two coaches don't call for boasting.

One can't argue with that approach, either, since preoccupation about what number you are in the poll could make it more difficult to think about the number of that opposing defensive tackle.

"Rankings are nice," Chatham says. "Something to look at. If we lose a game, the rankings are gone. We can't look at the rankings to carry us through the year. Being highly ranked will make our job that much tougher because teams will be trying to knock us off. I think we'll work harder because it's a first-time thing for us."

It's not the first time, exactly, but without counting the mothballs, when did Carolina last go undefeated?

UNC triumphs 8-1 in women's tennis

By MARK TAYLOR
Staff Writer

The UNC women's tennis team had a relatively easy time Tuesday defeating N.C. State 8-1, raising its unblemished season mark to 3-0.

The team was sharp both mentally and physically, coach Kitty Harrison said, adding that she believed this year's team may be her best ever.

"I've never had a team so developed so early," Harrison said. "I've also never had a group of girls this determined before."

At No. 1, sophomore Margie Brown took a 6-1, 6-4 victory over Stephanie Rauch. Brown used a steady baseline game as well as aggressive net play in her match with the Wolfpack's top player.

"She (Rauch) is the type of player you've really got to keep your concentration against, and I feel I concentrated well," Brown said. "I got a little tentative in the second set, though, and stayed back some when I should have gone to the net."

"Margie had a tough match," Harrison said. "Rauch gets to everything, and I think Margie played her real well and kept her concentration up."

The only loss for the Tar Heels came at the No. 2 position, where State's Sarah Harmer defeated Margaret Scott 6-4, 6-1. Kathy Barton, who regularly plays No. 2 for UNC missed Tuesday's match with a minor wrist injury.

"Harmer's just a steady consistent player," Harrison said. "She doesn't put much pace on the ball and Margaret plays much better against players who use a great deal of pace."

Betsy Heidenberger, Katherine Hogan, Lloyd Hatcher and Jennifer Balent all won lopsided victories in the final four positions, with no UNC player losing more than two games in any set.

Betsy Heidenberger ...took 6-2, 6-0 win

"They were all at the top of their games," the coach said. "And Jennifer (Balent) is playing her best of the season."

Margie Brown and Betsy Heidenberger split sets before defeating Rauch and Wendy Corey 6-4, 2-6, 6-1 at the No. 1 doubles spot. Hatcher and Hogan beat Harmer and Dawn Maybeck 6-2, 6-4 and Balent-Scott slipped by Mary James and Maureen Murphy 6-1, 6-0.

"We're still working hard on our doubles and potentially have three excellent teams," Harrison said. "Against teams like Duke and Clemson, we may well have to rely on our doubles play."

Ethics of scout visit questioned

From staff and wire reports

HIGH POINT—A football scout from the University of Tennessee was admitted to the Carolina locker room following the Tar Heels' 33-0 victory over Georgia Tech Saturday, and UNC coach Dick Crum is wondering why, the High Point Enterprise said in a copyright story Tuesday.

Tennessee part-time assistant coach Jim Hall was outside scouting Georgia Tech before this weekend's game. But he was in the locker room after the game, discussing the snap cadence of Tech quarterbacks with Carolina linebacker Darrell Nicholson.

In Chapel Hill Tuesday, UNC Sports Information Director Rick Brewer said Hall apparently walked into the locker room with the rest of the members of the media as they went to interview Crum and Tar Heel players.

Brewer said Hall, like any scout watching a future opponent, was admitted to the game with a press pass. "We're assuming he just walked in with a press pass," Brewer said.

Brewer, who said he had not heard of this type of incident happening before, added he did not know what could be done to keep it from happening again. Crum told him, "We might have to do something about the locker room," Brewer said.

There are no rules against allowing other teams' coaches in post-game locker rooms, but several Atlantic Coast Conference coaches contacted Monday were surprised at the incident and insisted it was not a common practice.

"The Tennessee coach should not have been in the locker room to begin with and he certainly should not have been talking with players," Crum said. "The only people allowed in the locker room are the press, then 20 minutes later we let the parents in. Prior to the game, word came to me that the Tennessee coach asked to talk to one of our players and I said no. How he got in there is beyond me."

Ralph Chaney, administrative assistant to Tennessee coach Johnny Majors, said the explanation was simple. "Our coach said he has two friends who are Carolina coaches and they let him in the locker room."

Crum said, "I would doubt that seriously because no one on our staff even knew the guy was in the locker room."

Majors said Hall did nothing wrong. "Our coaches know they are not to do anything unethical. I'd throw them out on their ear. Many, many times a coach goes into a locker room to exchange films or whatever. He was not instructed to stay out of the locker room. We have nothing to hide."

"I spoke to Coach Crum this morning and he did not have any complaints to make to me. Don't you think if he had a complaint he would have told me? I would be incensed to be accused of doing something unethical. If a coach of mine were to do something unethical, I would be incensed. To me, it's making a mountain out of a molehill."

Georgia Tech coach Bill Curry, informed of the incident by Crum, said he was going to look into the incident.

"If it's wrong at all, it's in the coaching ethics, but it doesn't sound like a very propitious thing to do," said Dave Didion of the NCAA enforcement division.

Brewer said Jimmy Carroll, an Enterprise reporter who was interviewing Nicholson when Hall questioned Nicholson, told him the coach mentioned a particular cadence to Nicholson and asked him if that was the one used by Georgia Tech. Nicholson said no and corrected what the Tennessee coach told him, Brewer said.
