Elections produce no results

By KERRY DEROGHI
Staff Writer

Although the run-off elections held Wednesday were to determine who would represent districts 17 and 19 on the Campus Governing Council, neither election produced any results.

In District 19, there will be another run-off election because no candidate received more than 50 percent of the vote. The candidates in the second run-off will be Steve Moazed and Bill Newman, who received three votes each. The other two candidates, Hugh Brady and Mike Williams, received two votes.

The District 17 election resulted in a dispute over campus election laws. Elections Board Chairman Gregg James said Wednesday the board would study an election bylaw violation by candidate Brian Goray. Goray received 22 votes and Deborah Levine, his opponent, received 17. Though Goray won the election, James said he violated the election bylaws by failing to submit to the Elections Board a record of election finances. The bylaws state a candidate must return a finance form to the board by 5 p.m. on the day of the election.

"There is a possibility of disqualification," James said. "It was his responsibility to get the form in."

James had earlier disqualified Goray from the election but then decided he might not be allowed to make the disqualification.

"Due to the ambiguities of the election laws regarding the power to disqualify, we decided to be safe and that we would have a meeting," James said. "The laws could have been taken either way."

James said he was disappointed with the results of both elections.

"I really don't see how the run-off election could have been prevented; it was well publicized and the candidates did more in this district (19) than the other," James said. "As to the stalemate, my feeling is that I did everything to make sure the problem did not happen."

A second run-off between Moazed and Newman for the District 19 seat will be held Wednesday.

Rita Mae Brown

Novelist explains lifestyle

By ROANN BISHOP
Staff Writer

Speaking to a capacity audience in Memorial Hall Wednesday night, novelist and poet Rita Mae Brown expressed her views on homosexuality and lesbianism and explained her motives behind her best-selling novel Rubyfruit Jungle.

Brown, a proponent of the rights of both women and gays, stated her theory of life early in her speech: "If you can't raise consciousness, raise hell."

She seemed to do exactly that with Rubyfruit Jungle. Called by one magazine, "The single most incendiary novel to have emerged from the women's movement," the book parallels the author's life of growing up in the rural South.

Like her counterpart in the novel, Brown won athletic and academic awards in her Florida high school but risked both when she defended her individuality and beliefs.

"I want to dispel the myths about homosexuality," Brown said. "Psychologists never see a happy homosexual or heterosexual. People who are happy don't live on someone's couch. If they're happy, they do it for free."

"Another myth is that all homosexuals are sex maniacs. Unfortunately, this is not true. There are many things that we do to each other that are cruel. In the case of sexism, the ills that we do will never be cured. We can't cure society's ills unless we hang out the dirty sheets."

Brown said she was annoyed by the fact that so many people asked her why she was gay.

"This is really an absurd question. It's like asking someone why their eyes are brown. Ask my mother and father this question. It's heterosexual people who breed people like me."

"The real reason that I'm a lesbian is out of devotion to Christian charity. All the women out there are praying for men. I gave them my share (of men)," Brown said.

"I don't believe that I'm really heterosexual or homosexual. There is a tremendous sex energy in all of us. The life that society forces on us requires that we either shake hands or fuck. We're often ensnared by not being clear about our emotions."

"I'm not a homosexual or a heterosexual. I'm me."

From her experience, Brown said that she responded more to the emotions within people, and the emotions most often associated with women were the ones that particularly appealed to her.

Smashed

The windows of several cars around town have been shot out with a BB gun during the last two weeks, and police still do not know the identity or motives of the culprits. So far only one incident has occurred on campus. The windows in a car parked in the Planetarium lot were shot out Tuesday night. Other incidents have occurred on Pittsboro Street, Manning Drive and Mason Farm Road. Chapel Hill police said there had been several such incidents.

Report given mild reception

The curriculum changes proposed in the recently released College Curriculum Report were greeted Wednesday with mildly positive reactions from the student body president and faculty members.

The report, which was released Monday, would institute a one-semester mathematics requirement for all students along with the current two-semester foreign language requirement. It is a revised form of the Thornton Report, which had a four-semester foreign language requirement and a two-semester mathematics requirement.

If approved early next semester by the Faculty Council, the report would be implemented in 1982 with changes in the foreign language requirement scheduled for 1984 and 1986.

"The radically revised College Curriculum Report has been toned down considerably, in my opinion," Student Body President Bob Saunders said. "It's not the threat it once was."

However, English Professor Weldon Thornton, who was chairman of the committee that wrote the original report, said he would have liked to have seen it stay closer to the original. "We've had to make some alterations and compromises," he said. "Naturally I'm disappointed."

Thornton said he was pleased with the report in view of financial restraints and in comparison with the current curriculum.

"We wanted to set up a curriculum that was best for the University and the students, without too much concern about how these things would be implemented," he said.

Madeline Levine, chairman of the department of Slavic languages, said, "It was a compromise. Given the restraints, I'm quite satisfied. But in a theoretical universe, I would have wanted more."

One of Student Government's complaints with the original report was the University did not have the money to institute the four-semester foreign language requirement, and Saunders said, "We were proven right."

Rat scurries through construction debris near Union ...first appeared when building started last summer

Rats discovered near construction

By LINDA BROWN

"I was walking to class near the side of the Union," senior Donna Snead said, "And I heard this rustling over in the grass. I started to look and I saw a glimpse of a fleeing gray figure. It was about 10 inches long."

Kim Druce, a freshman Winston dorm resident, had a similar experience. "It looked like it had come from under a car," she said. "I was grossed out."

And so did senior Connie Dunkley, secretary for the judicial branch of Student Government. "We looked out the window, and there was this big rat," she said.

Though several students have reported seeing rats around the Carolina Union, in the new library construction area and near the Undergraduate Library, health officials say the rats are nothing to worry about.

"Rats run around construction and things like that," said former Student Health Services Director Dr. James Taylor. "They don't attack or bite anybody."

"As far as I'm concerned, there really isn't any threat to anyone now," he said.

But some students questioned how sanitary an area inhabited by rats was.

"The whole idea of seeing a rat makes you have these real negative feelings," said Peggy Leight, Residence Hall Association president.

"When you see a rat you think of dirty, infested areas. It's kind of

Some favorite restaurants get low sanitation grades

By SUSAN PRUETT-LUCE

Some students fancy themselves as more sophisticated eaters than those who sit in the Carolina Union, contentedly munching their hamburgers or peanut butter sandwiches at lunch. And each day at noon, they walk through campus to partake of the finer fare on Franklin Street.

But a few of the restaurants frequented by UNC students have less than appetizing sanitation grades—among them, The Porthole, Carolina Coffee Shop, Spanky's and the Rathskeller.

Apparently, B and C ratings aren't that unusual for the eateries located in Franklin Street's older buildings between McCorkle Place and Columbia Street. Owners said business doesn't appear to have suffered because of a lack of straight A's. Barry Huff, manager of the Porthole, said people often asked about the C rating there. The day of the inspection, two refrigerators weren't operating and the rinse cycle in the dishwasher was two degrees below the required temperature, he said. Prior to this, the restaurant had an A rating.

Restaurants are required by law to post sanitation grades where they can be seen by customers. But according to several students, a desk lamp recently covered the C grade at The Porthole.

C.A. Laws, sanitation supervisor at the Orange County Health Department, said an inspector "had them move the lamp."

Sutton's Drug Store displays a B rating but lack of room is the main problem there, manager John V. Woodard Jr. said. "It (the rating) doesn't have to do with cleanliness, but construction," he said. "It doesn't seem to have affected business—it's gone up."

Ron Brooks, a Rathskeller employee, said that with a 31-year-old restaurant, "It's impossible to keep the place the way they (the health department) want it." Brooks said the Rathskeller had a C for nearly a month this summer. "There should be some type of lenience," he said, referring to restaurants in older buildings.

"We have to treat everybody the same," Laws said. "The scales don't vary by condition or location."

"I'd much rather every place in Orange County had an A rating," Laws said. "It'd make our job much easier."

Inspectors grade area restaurants about four times a year, Laws said. They go over a checklist in each establishment insisting on excellence in such categories as lighting, cleaning and food protection.

But Laws said if the restaurant had a particularly disastrous day, it could make the suggested improvements and request another unannounced inspection. Improved grades result from compliance with health regulations.

Spanky's, which now displays a B, has just had its kitchen remodeled in an effort to comply, said the new manager, Orman Hasherly. He is now waiting for reinspection.

Byron Freeman of the Carolina Coffee Shop (which has a B) said the sanitation code was recently rewritten and is not as strict on conditions as it was.

"But I haven't noticed the difference," he said.
