Noted jazz vocalist Al Jarreau will perform at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Memorial Hall. The concert is sold out. Jarreau has a complete bag of vocal tricks ranging from scat singing to imitating instruments, and he has been described as having an "orchestra in his throat."

Production of 'Chorus Line' lives up to reputation

By BOB ROYALTY
Staff Writer

A Chorus Line, which played in Memorial Hall this past weekend, lived up to its reputation of being one of the most exciting Broadway shows of the last several years. It is certainly the most popular Broadway production to come to Chapel Hill since Ain't Misbehavin' last year.

They respond with razzmatazz dance numbers, touching songs and comedy routines. Soon we know the history of each character and can warm to the cast. We choose our favorites and are disappointed when one of our "friends" is cut. The musical score by Marvin Hamlisch lingers after the show is over. Hamlisch's melodies are catchy and beautiful, bouncing and moving. But Edward Kleban's lyrics never match the brilliance of the score; they're not much more than rhyming phrases. James Kirkwood and Nicholas Dante won a Pulitzer Prize for A Chorus Line's outstanding book. It moves like a play, rather than a musical, dramatically unfolding and using songs to support the action. An interesting aspect of the final show Sunday night was the way performance matched theme. The performers looked tired and sounded a little hoarse.

But they gave their best effort, belting out solos as if they were in that crucial audition for the first time. Cassie, played by Thia Fadel, is the closest to a female lead in the play. Fadel was disappointing in the part: Her acting and singing didn't meet the demands of the part and she just went through the motions for "The Music and the Mirror." That number is supposed to be a show stopper; Fadel made it boring. Other performers made up for any shortcomings though. Alison Gertner and Danny Rounds gave particularly good performances. And "Hello Twelve, Hello Thirteen, Hello Love" worked perfectly: humorous, nostalgic, a little sad and exciting. Broadway on Tour never quite equals a New York production. The result is usually irritating. But A Chorus Line was close enough to Broadway to make one homesick.

Records

A Chorus Line follows a group of dancers auditioning for a show. The director, Zach, tries to learn about the dancers by asking personal questions.
