

Right to abortion said to be woman's choice

By FRANCES SILVA
Staff Writer

The right to choose has always been one of the fundamental rights given to an American citizen. Now as the political climate slowly shifts toward the conservative, the right of the woman to choose to have an abortion or not is being threatened, Faye Wattleton, national president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, said Thursday.

In a press conference, Wattleton, the first woman and the first black president of PPF, pledged continued support for the right of women to choose. At a panel discussion Wednesday, six health professionals, who had either performed or assisted in abortions, also discussed their feelings on the subject.

Both Wattleton and the professionals felt there was a possibility of a constitutional amendment banning abortion getting passed by the new Congress and sent to the states for ratification.

However, they said it had little chance of passing.

"I think women want freedom of choice. I don't think they will muster enough support," William Brenner, professor of obstetrics and gynecology, said.

"Who is better prepared to enter a new generation into the world, the woman or the state?" said Dr. Warren Hern, who performs abortions and heads a private clinic in Colorado.

Hern said he believed that the only people who gained from controversy over abortion were politicians.

He said not allowing a woman to have an abortion because she could not afford it was a social injustice.

Wattleton, however said she was pleased that 22 states still provided state funds for abortion despite the Hyde Amendment banning the use of Medicaid funds for them. North Carolina is one of the nine states which voluntarily provides these funds. The other states have court-enforced aid.

"You are threatening your own existence with a pregnancy. The mortality risk is 10 to 35 percent higher than having an early abortion," Hern said at the panel discussion. "If the pregnancy is undesired, the most appropriate thing is an abortion."

"I don't think any of us have neglected the fact that it is killing, but we balance the killing against the overall life view of the patient," Brenner said.

Wattleman and the health professionals agreed an abortion controversy would continue.

"I think this issue will never be black or white, it will always be gray. The choice is still up to the individual," Heidi Bruninghaus, a nurse in the OBGYN clinic, said.

Anti-abortion march set today

The Carolina Students for Life will sponsor an anti-abortion demonstration today at Memorial Hospital.

Chris Kremer, co-chairman of the group said the front of the door of Memorial Hospital would be as close as the students could get to the abortion ward.

"We're hoping to persuade women from going through with an abortion," he said.

The demonstration will begin at noon at the Bell Tower and go from there to the hospital.

The group also plans to picket the ward again next semester.
