

Firm looking for disposal site

By DAVID McHUGH
DTH Staff Writer

Despite opposition from local residents, a California company is continuing its search of five North Carolina counties for an industrial waste disposal site.

Chemical Waste Management Inc., of Long Beach, Calif., has been considering 17 different sites in Lee, Chatham, Moore, Alamance and Montgomery counties, in a search that began in 1978, said Corporate Development Director Leonard Tinnen. He said such a facility would be a health safeguard, not a health hazard.

Many residents do not agree, however, despite public presentations held by CWM to assuage community fears. Several citizen's groups have been formed to oppose the waste disposal site.

Residents fear the proposed burial site might leak hazardous chemicals into surrounding soil, said Cheryl Baldwin, representative of Citizen's Against Hazardous Waste in Chatham.

"You do have to have a disposal method, but landfill is the least desirable method of waste management, although it is the cheapest," she said. "We need to look at alternative methods (of disposal) before we even look at landfills," she said last week.

Tinnen said the site was needed and when finally chosen would not be a health hazard.

"North Carolina is the 11th largest producer of waste and has no EPA (Environmental Protection Agency)-permitted disposal facility. It is the third largest state with no such disposal facility. The need for one is clearly there," he said.

Tinnen said he understood residents' fears that buried chemicals might leak, but said there was no chance of this happening. "We don't dispose liquids, only solids. Solids do not migrate or leach," he said.

"That sounds great, but it's bull," said Wes Hart, chairman of the Chatham group. "Many of these caustic chemicals absorb water very quickly. If you bury a solid that absorbs water, you've got a material that can move again."

"There isn't any way to tell what will happen in 50 years. By the EPA's admission, four out of five landfill sites in this country are already leaking."

Hart also said he was dismayed that CWM would be permitted to do most of the monitoring of the site. "We don't feel it's fair to let them do their own testing. This is very lucrative for them, and we don't think they'll be that concerned with what they bury," he said.

Both Hart and Baldwin said they feared possible flooding could endanger the nearby water supply.

Tinnen called such fears "a terrible misunderstanding. We won't place a facility that is subject to flooding. Statements like that are ludicrous. Such a facility will just not be approved."

"North Carolina has one of the most ominous threats to public health in the U.S. (The state is) a major producer of industrial waste, and there is no facility to dispose of that waste."

Tinnen added that the site could be used to clean up the miles of state roadside contaminated by illegal dumping of toxic PCB chemicals.

"That's fine for PCB," Hart said. "It won't combine with water. But hundreds of chemicals can't be bound up so that they cannot combine with water."

Tinnen said CWM hoped to acquire rights to a site within 60 days, although obtaining final government approval would take months.

Hart said his group would continue to fight. "If we have enough people and enough votes, then we can be politically effective," he said.

Presidential politics in America

Speaker addresses U.S. election process

By KEN MINGIS
DTH Staff Writer

Speaking before a crowd of about 100 people Thursday night in Hill Hall, Alexander Heard, chancellor at Vanderbilt University and a UNC alumnus, discussed the American presidential selection process in the 1981 Weil Lecture on American Citizenship.

Heard, who has been working on a long-term study of the process, criticized the way presidents have been selected every four years and blamed it in part for a national malaise that has grown in the country during the last 15 years.

"The American political process is interminably long, extremely costly, interrupts the flow of government and offers no choice of the best candidates," he said.

Heard noted that voter participation in elections had fallen from 64 percent in 1960 to 51.8 percent last year.

"A decreasing number of voters feels any enthusiasm to vote," he said. "During the last 15 years, confidence and pride in political institutions has fallen by one-half."

Heard listed several reasons for the declining confidence in the political system, many of which have come up in recent studies of presidential elections.

"Running through the discussions has been a concern for the health of the two-party system," Heard said. "There is some feeling that political parties may be dead."

"There is a pervasive perception that TV has become a dominant factor in disrupting the nominating process of the (Democratic and Republican) parties."

Heard also said single-issue groups had made an impact on electing presidents.

"Those groups, well-funded as they are, have usurped the role of parties," he said. "This has been accomplished by intervening in the campaign and making a general consensus in the party more difficult."

"These problems have contributed to the skeptical mood of the country," Heard said. "There is explicit doubt now that the United States is governable."

Heard said the lack of confidence in the political process was often translated to the president himself. "The blame or hope of the country is focused in one place — the White House," Heard said. "Americans feel that if we had a president who was wise and skilled enough, we could work things out."

"The hope is that if we improve the process, we can improve the quality of the leadership and thus improve the United States," Heard said.

Heard said that much study would be needed before effective changes could be made. "Presidential selection will be under study at the time of the bicentennial of the Constitution in 1987," he said. "It could be that our political requirements call for changes in the political institutions of the 1980s, comparable to those of the Constitution in the 1780s."

"The improvements that are made will have to give the president a better chance to lead," Heard said.

and other customers) narrows," he said. To supplement water supply during shortages, the Chapel Hill water system is connected to Durham's and Hillsborough's. Horne said shortages occurred when the level of University Lake dropped to where it could not be treated. He said they tried to avoid reaching this point by anticipating consumption and knowing the normal weather periods.

The rock quarry on Highway 54 is a subsidiary to the main Chapel Hill water supply. OWASA is trying to build Cane Creek Reservoir about 10 miles west of Carrboro near the Alamance County line, but that development has been held up in court, Temple said. "Cane Creek would solve our water problem for at least 25 years," he added.

The OWASA rate increases, the first in both three years, are a result of increasing costs and an attempt to generate net revenue for capital construction of Cane Creek, Temple said.

He said he doubted it would do any good to take action against OWASA for what he sees as discriminatory rates, but said, "We don't want to have it stacked against us every time they have a rate increase."

News in Brief

Reagan threatens budget veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ronald Reagan said Sunday he would not sign the compromise budget resolution worked out between the House and Senate to return the government to solvency.

Reagan, talking to reporters outside the White House, suggested Congress continue over the Thanksgiving holiday the spending measure which expired Friday.

Expressing frustration with Congress' inability to adopt budget bills in an orderly manner, Reagan said, "This is no way to run a railroad."

On Capitol Hill, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said, "The president just called me to tell me he'll veto it." O'Neill spoke to reporters as he recessed the House before it could vote on the compromise.

Reagan has vowed repeatedly to veto any "budget-busting" funding bill.

game

Fuller, who didn't start the game because of a sprained ankle, had six tackles — two for losses — and broke up two Blue Devil passes. "William Fuller played very well," UNC coach Dick Crum said. "He didn't practice much this week because of the bad ankle, but he did a great job. As a team, we played our regular defense. We didn't do anything special."

The Tar Heel defense stymied Blue Devil starting quarterback Ben Bennett all day as the sophomore was on the run to complete his 13-of-31 passes. He produced only 3 points for Duke. Sometime starter Ron Sully drove the team for the Devils' only score late in fourth quarter.

The Tar Heels, themselves, started out slowly taking only a 10.3 halftime lead. But with the defense sticking and Bryant clicking, UNC rolled in the second half.

"We played a very good football game," Crum said. "In light of the injuries we've had, this team has done a good job. We're 9-2 and have had a lot of adversity. Our kids have done an excellent job."

Gator Bowl president Wilford Lyon said he feels the same way. "We feel very fortunate to have North Carolina coming to Jacksonville (Fla.) Dec. 28," he said. "They have a great team and they showed it today. Today's game was important, but I don't want to speculate on what would have happened had they lost."

The Tar Heels face Lou Holtz's Arkansas Razorbacks in the ABC Monday night game. Bryant said, "I'll be full speed by then."

noise

will measure from property lines, as stated in the town noise ordinance, Bianchi said.

"If it becomes necessary to write a citation, they (police) have to go to the property boundary or the road in order to actually write you up," he said.

The town noise ordinance sets maximum sound levels, guidelines for obtaining noise permits, and sanctions for violations of the ordinance.

The daily maximum sound levels are: 60 decibels for 8 a.m.-11 p.m. and 50 decibels for 11 p.m.-8 a.m. on Sunday-Wednesday and 70 decibels or 85 decibels with a permit for 5 p.m.-11 p.m. on Thursday, 5 p.m.-1 a.m. on Friday and 10 a.m.-1 a.m. on Saturday. Other hours on Thursday, Friday and Saturday will follow the same levels as Sunday-Wednesday.

No one will know the success of the new guidelines for some time, Condie said, but the housing department saw a need and tried to meet it.

"I think we need to try it and if it works, great, and if it doesn't, we'll need to modify it," Condie said.

for the record

In Friday's story, "Sophomores win College Bowl Championship," The Daily Tar Heel incorrectly reported that the UNC College Bowl team placed fifth in the regionals last year. The team placed fifth in the national competition. The DTH regrets the error.

Fee action delayed

The Orange Water and Sewer Authority's board of directors voted unanimously Thursday night to delay until Dec. 2 proposed University Lake fee increase for two campus groups until student input was received.

A fee increase to $15 per boat and $5 per member per semester for the UNC Crew and Sailing Clubs was given preliminary approval by OWASA's Committee of the Whole earlier this month.

This would amount to about 12 cents per use per member, based on a usage rate of twice per week, said OWASA engineer Everett Billingsley.

Alison Pentz, representing the UNC Sailing Club, presented the board with a petition bearing more than 350 signatures asking the board to reconsider the move.

"We feel the board did not adequately contact the students about the fee increase," Pentz said. "We only found out about it a couple of weeks ago."

Pentz said both groups would accept the proposed boat fee but that the proposed member fee was too high.

"We only have about 20-25 members (in the Sailing Club) who get a lot of use from University Lake," Pentz said.

"Three uses per week per member might be fair for the crew club... because they have a solid core of about 20-30 women and 20-30 men who use the lake."

She said the Sailing Club has about 100 members.
