Controversy surrounds firm's date of sale;

national security adviser Allen admits error

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - National security adviser Richard V. Allen wrote in a government financial disclosure statement that he sold his consulting firm in Jaunary 1978, but now, according to a White House lawyer, says the sale actually took place early this year.

Questioned about the sale date, White House counsel Fred Fielding said Allen sent him a memo last week stating that he had mistakenly put down the 1978 date and had meant to write January 1981.

In the disclosure statement, filed last February, Allen said he no longer was president of Potomac International Corp. as of January 1978, and added in parentheses "sold business."

But Fielding could not explain why if the sale of Potomac International had occurred in January 1981, there was no mention of either the sale or Allen's recent ownership of the firm under the income and assets section of the financial questionnaire.

Bob Flynn, an official of the Government Ethics Office, said Monday that if Allen had made a capital gain on the sale of the firm, that amount should have been listed under income.

Flynn also said federal regulations required that nominees list on their disclosure statements any interest in a business held at the date of the preceding calendar year. Peter Hannaford, owner of the Hannaford Corp., has said the firm acquired Potomac International on Jan.

18, 1981, two days before President Ronald Reagan's inauguration and three days before Allen received $1,000 in cash from a Japanese journalist who had interviewed first lady Nancy Reagan.

However, when asked Sunday night from whom his company had bought the consulting firm, Hanndford said, "no comment. ... You could ask me 25 questions, but all you're going to get is on comment." Other past and current officials of the Hannaford Corp. also refused to discuss who had owned the firm before Hannaford bought it. One, who asked not to be identified, said Hannaford had kept details of the purchase "close to his chest."

Hannaford is a former aide to Reagan and a past business partner of Michael Deaver, one of Reagan's top three White House aides.

On the White House disclosure statement, Allen said that he had received a $75,000 salary from Potomac International in 1980 and had been president of the consulting firm from August 1972 to January 1978.

But Potomac International's corporate reports on file with the District of Columbia listed Allen as president of the firm through its latest annual report, dated March 13, 1980.

Knowingly and willfully stating false information on a government financial disclosure statement is a felony punishable under federal law by a fine of up to $10,000 and up to five years in prison, according to the ethics office.

Allen could not be reached for comment on his disclosure statement, but Peter Dailey, Allen's spokesman, referred calls to Fielding, who besides being White House counsel had represented Allen before the two men entered the Reagan administration.

"He sent me a note last week and said he had made a mistake," Fielding told The Associated Press Sunday night. Fielding noted that Allen also made mistakes in his disclosure statement on the date of his White House appointment and the filing date, putting down "1980" for both when he had meant 1981.

The Justice Department is conducting a preliminary investigation of Allen's receipt of the $1,000 from a Japanese journalist to see if a independent special prosecutor should be appointed.

Allen said he received the money on Jan. 21 after helping to arrange the interview between a Japanese women's magazine and Mrs. Reagan.

Allen said the money was intended as an honorarium for Mrs. Reagan, but that he intercepted the $1,000 to avoid embarrassing the first lady. He said he intended to turn the money over to the government, but put it in one of his safes and forgot it for eight months.

Allen also confirmed Saturday that he accepted two watches from the Japanese journalists, but said the gifts were received before he became a government official on Jan. 20 and therefore violated no government regulation.

Trend study concludes

Republicans control N.C.

The Associated Press

RALEIGH - A University of South Carolina political science professor concludes that North Carolina Democrats, who suffered some stunning losses last year, may be in for more bad news.

Earl Black, who has been making a study of presidential voting trends in the South, says that despite the Democrats' lock on the General Assembly and Gov. Jim Hunt's landslide reelection, North Carolina Republicans now hold the high

Janice Faulkner, executive director of the state Democratic Party, said she hadn't read it and didn't want to comment

Black's analysis looks at presidential elections in groups of years - from 1920 to 1948, 1952 to 1964, and 1968 to 1988. It classifies counties as being Republican or Democratic if they were carried by the same party in at least three-fourths of the elections during the given period.

By that measure, 76 of North Carolina's counties were Democratic and only seven were Republican from 1920 to 1948. The rest, 17, were mixed, with the mountains being the main area hostile to Democrats.

Costly fuel plentiful for holiday

CHARLOTTE (AP) - People traveling over the Thanksgiving holiday should have no problems locating gasoline, but paying for fuel could be another matter, the Carolina Motor Club reports.

That's because gasoline will cost about $2 more per tankful than last year, the club says.

More than 50 percent of the 184 service stations surveyed by the club in North Carolina and South Carolina said they would be open Thanksgiving. Normal operating hours will be observed by most of the stations on Friday and the weekend after the holiday.

About 59 percent of the North Carolina stations and 57 percent of the South Carolina stations said they would remain open during the holiday.

The club also reports that full-service gasoline prices have dropped since Labor Day by almost half a cent in North Carolina to an average $1.448 a gallon for unleaded and $1.398 for regular. Self-service gas is a full cent less than in September at $1.341 for unleaded and $1.270 for regular.

Central America worries Haig

MEXICO CITY (AP) - Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., arriving Monday for a 24-hour visit to Mexico, praised Latin American efforts to create a nuclear-free zone in the region.

Reporters who traveled with him on the plane from Washington, however, said he called the "radicalization" of Mexico's Central American neighbor Nicaragua a threat to peace and stability in the region.

"We offered them ... normalization, but recent events suggest they are being contrary to us," he said. "It is our hope that all the nations of the region will share our concern that the totalitarian regime in Nicaragua comes as a threat to peace and stability and peaceful social and economic changes."

Approximately 1,000 leftists demonstrated outside the U.S. Embassy building here Sunday to protest Haig's visit and the Reagan's administration's anti-Communist stance in Central America.

Brady home for Thanksgiving

WASHINGTON (AP) - After eight months of repeated surgery and torturous therapy following a gunshot wound to the brain, White House press secretary James S. Brady walked out of the hospital Monday, flashing a thumbs-up sign.

"They say, 'The Bear will be back.' I'm here to say, 'The Bear is back,' " Brady said in a statement issued at the White House.

Leaning on the arm of his wife, Sarah, and supported on his other side by a therapist, Brady waved to reporters, shook hands with several White House staffers and kissed his therapists goodbye.

Brady's 21/2-year-old son, Scott, was waiting with a kiss when he arrived home to the applause and cheers of his neighbors. The brick house was decked out with a banner declaring: "Welcome Home Bear." "Daddy's coming home to sleep," Scott had said of his father's return.

Program honors Dec. grads

By SCOTT BOLEJACK DTH Staff Writer

To honor and recognize December graduates, the University has scheduled a program and reception for 8 p.m. Dec. 4 in the banquet hall of the Morehead Building.

It is the first time the University has sponsored an evening reception and program. In the past two years those students graduating in December were invited to attend only an informal afternoon reception.

Monica McCarty, chairman of the December graduation committee, said that an increased interest in some type of formal gathering prompted the University to sponsor the evening program. The reception will begin at 8 p.m. followed by the program which is scheduled to start at 8:30. Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III will speak, as will senior class President John Goodwin. Approximately 1,276 students will graduate in December, including Ph.D. and master's candidates. Of those students, 536 are undergraduates. McCarty said most students who graduate in December were graduating a semester early, a semester late, or were accounting majors.

McCarty said that the committee was asking those students graduating in December to respond if they would not be able to attend. She said the responses would allow the committee to carefully plan the reception.

McCarty commended Vice Chancellor for University Relations Rollie Tillman for the work he had done to plan the program and to insure that funds would be available for committee use.

She also commended Goodwin, who she said was the first senior class president to fulfill a campaign promise to organize a more involved service for December graduates.

McCarty said she wanted to make it clear that the program was not a commencement exercise. She said that the University had just one commencement ceremony in May for all its graduates.

McCarty said that December graduates were welcome to return to campus in May to participate in the commencement exercise, though she said she realized that by spring most of these students would have scattered.

McCarty said that the December graduates were encouraged to invite their parents to the reception and program.

Their only potential stumbling block is President Ronald Reagan's economic program, Black says. Should the program fail, Black says GOP hopes in local elections could dim also.

Black says his study indicates an "underlying pattern that suggests collapse" of the traditional Democratic base in presidential voting. The result, he says, poses a "fantastic opportunity," for local Republican candidates.

"Unless Republican presidents blunder in grossly provocative and disastrous ways, presidential Republicanism in the South is now so advanced that it should be assumed that the Republican Party will carry the region in presidential politics for the foreseeable future," his study says.

Black's study hasn't been published yet, but it already has gained some attention in political circles. It is a draft of a chapter for a book he is writing with his brother Merle Black, a University of North Carolina political science professor.

It has found favor, understandably, among Republicans. North Carolina GOP Chairman Dave Flaherty keeps a copy, provided by White House political aide Lee Atwater, on his desk.

In the period through 1964, 60 counties were Democratic in presidential elections and 29 were Republican, but the Republican counties controlled larger percentage of voters.

In the post-Great Society period - ending with Reagan's 1980 election, which included North Carolina in his sweep only 10 counties were counted as Democratic; 40 were GOP and 50 were mixed.

The counties that Black counted as remaining solidly Democratic were Orange and Durham counties, generally considered liberal, and a handful of counties in the southeastern and northeastern areas.

Republicans held onto their mountain base, grew strong in the Piedmont cities and finally scored dramatic reverses in eastern North Carolina.

Taking the South as a whole the pattern was similiar - firmly Democratic counties in presidential races amounted to 89 percent up to 1948, but were only 14 percent in the most recent period.

The analysis is based on history and whether it will hold true in coming elections is another matter. A big factor may be the success or failure of Reagan's economic program.

HAVE A HAPPY THANKSGIVING! school

"Detours," written for and performed by the handicapped, was produced at the ArtSchool. It was commissioned by the N.C. Arts Council and aired on Channel 11.

"We do so much for so many people, it's mind-boggling," Evans said.

Ideas for projects are a group effort. Evans said that everyone is willing to listen to any new ideas.

Metelits agreed. "We have an open ear to anyone who wants to do something interesting and different," she said. "We try to work with anyone who wants to develop (artistically)."

The ArtSchool is almost completely staffed by volunteers. Besides the director and assistant director, only the instructors are paid. Actors, technicians, directors and clerical help are all persons who donate their time.

"We only exist because of volunteers," said Evans.

Metelits treats her volunteer work as if it were a full-time job. She handles client relations, some public relations, keeps records, answers questions, maintains the mailing list and "brainstorms with the rest."

"I am here a full working day and do things outside that time," said Metelits. "I feel it is a very important thing to give my time to (the ArtSchool) and it is an exciting and vital place to be "awad - vanantil

The teachers are artists who need to supplement their income, Evans said. She added that it is a transient locale and new teachers are always coming in, brining fresh ideas.

"The ArtSchool is not an art school only. It is an art center; an umbrella organization for a whole lot of disciplines of art. It is for everyone of all ages and tastes," Menache said.

The ArtSchool is now at the end of its annual fund drive, with a goal of $50,000. It has an operating budget of $200,000 a year, Evans said. It is funded by the town of Carrboro, The National Endowment for the Arts, the N.C. Arts Council and memberships and private donations that are usually earmarked for a special project.
