Crimestoppers program active in Chapel Hill

By ALEXANDRA MCMILLAN DTH Staff Writer

Have you ever seen or heard about a crime but were afraid to get involved? Now there is a way you can contribute evidence anonymously to the police and possibly get a reward. Call Crimestoppers (929-9000)

Crimestoppers, a program begun by a police officer from Albuquerque, New Mexico, focuses on solving criminal cases by receiving evidence from witnesses in the community.

A citizen who has information about a crime calls in and is assigned a 'code' number by the police coordinator, said Captain Lindy Pendergrass of the Chapel Hill Police Department. The caller uses this number whenever calling to give information so that he or she can remain anonymous.

"If we make an arrest using certain evidence, we go to the board of directors (of Crimestoppers) and say, for example: 'Caller 15 gave us evidence about some stolen property and a license plate number, and as a result of this we got (solved) 15 break ine " " Dandaraman cald

"We tell the board of directors what the evidence was worth to us in terms of the cases it helped us solve, and they decide on the reward," he said. "It can be anything from $1 to $1000, although lots of times people don't ask for a reward."

Rewards are only given if the evidence directly helps to solve a crime.

The Chapel Hill Crimestoppers program, begun in October, 1981, was originally funded by its sponsor, the Greater Chapel Hill-Carrboro Chamber of Commerce, but it is now funded by contributions from various clubs and groups, Pendergrass said.

The board of directors is made up of citizens from all segments of the community who have been recommended to the Chamber of Commerce by the chief of police or the sheriff.

"So far the program has been working really well," he said. "Greensboro's Crimestoppers program has had fantastic results, and we expect to do the same once we get going well. We will soon join Crimestoppers U.S.A."

Chapel Hill break-ins Stereos stolen

More than $12,500 worth of stereo equipment and cash was stolen in various apartment and store break-ins, Chapel Hill Police Department reported this week.

•A Thomas stereo component and two speakers, valued at $11,000 were stolen from Colortyme TV Rental at Eastgate Shopping Center Saturday afternoon, according to Chapel Hill police reports. The theft occurred after manager Ted Stone placed the merchandise in a delivery van at the rear of the store. The lock on the van was apparently broken. There are no suspects in the case.

•A stereo receiver, turntable and two speakers were stolen Friday night from Don Toothman, of 451 Melanie Ct., Foxcroft Apartments, police reports state. The thief apparently broke the rear bedroom window, unlocked the sliding glass door and took the stereo equipment, valued at $1,370. The report said the losses were covered by insurance.

•David Garrett Bremer, a 26-year-old instructor at North Carolina Central University, was arrested Saturday on charges of shoplifting at the A&P on Airport Road, police reports said. Bremer, who was found with two steaks valued at $11.70 initially gave police false information concerning his name, address, age and social security number. Court date is set for Feb. 16.

•In a break-in at Flowers by Hackney Monday night, approximately $155 was was stolen from the cash register. According to police reports, the broken rear window of the West Franklin Street business was apparently used for entry. Propery damage was estimated at $50. There are no suspects in the case.

Wetlands essential to coastal North Carolina ecological development

By KELLY SIMMONS DTH Staff Writer

Freshwater wetlands along North Carolina's coastal plain are undergoing rapid development which disregards the wetlands' future ecological value, a Duke University researcher said recently.

These wetlands, called pocosins, are evergreen shrub bogs which occur on a high topographical area and grow on wet sandy humus and shallow or deep organic soil.

Curtis Richardson, associate professor of resource ecology at the Duke University School of Forestry and Environmental Studies, has written a book titled Pocosin Wetlands, which tells the history of years ago to their current management and preservation.

Richardson said pocosins were seen as having little development potential in the early 1960s. Since then, the increasing prices of wood products, food, energy, minerals and land have caused the wetlands to develop.

The pocosins don't need to be preserved, they just need to be used sensibly, Richardson said. They seem to have important roles in water retention and in maintaining the water quality of the estuaries, he said. The pocosins also provide a valuable habitat for animals like black bears, bobcats, otters and possibly cougars. These areas should be kept to maintain native species Richardson said.

Jim Smith, Coastal Energy Impact Program coordinator at the Department of Coastal Management, said some of the reasons for clearing the pocosins were to improve forestry, to acquire more land for agriculture and to mine peat. He said the land was worthless for agriculture with the peat in place and not good for forestry in places with deep organic shurub. Areas with shallow shrub make that richest farmland in the world, Smith said.

Peat also is being studied as a valuable resource, although no one is sure of its uses yet. Smith said once the peat was mined, there would be excellent soil for agriculture and forestry.

The main concern of the North

Resources was that the estuaries must be protected, Richardson said. Development of the pocosins would require that fresh water be drained into estuaries or rivers through canals or ditches. During agriculture development, shrubs would run off into the water, contaminating the estuaries.

"From this starting point, we are looking for a way to clear the wetlands, but we are also looking for a way to protect the estuaries," Smith said. He said the Coastal Water Management Task Force was studying the problem of drainage and how to keep water stored for irrigation in these areas.

Two major pocosins now under protection are the 13,000-acre Green Swamp

Cannon Mills to change hands

KANNAPOLIS (AP) - Cannon Mills Co., which founded the Kannapolis community in 1906 and employs most of its workers, is in the process of being sold to an outsider, company officials said Thursday.

Residents live in Cannon-owned homes, shop in Cannon-owned stores and look to the company for guidance and support.

Even though they knew about the month-long negotiations between Cannon stockholders and Los Angeles developer David Murdock, most said they didn't believe Cannon would let the mill go.

"They're not selling Cannon Mills. They're selling Kannapolis," said longtime resident Carlyle Rutledge in an interview with the Wall Street Journal.

Late Wednesday, Murdock announced that 72 percent of Cannon's stockholders had offered him their shares. His tender offer of $44 per share expires at midnight tonight.

Watt lessens communications

WASHINGTON (AP) - Escalating his battle with Congress, Interior Secretary James G. Watt has barred meetings between department officials and aides of two sometimes hostile congressional oversight committees.

Rep. John F. Seiberling, D-Ohio, released letters from Watt and Interior Undersecretary Donald Hodel on Thursday outlining the policy. Seiberling called it "alarming and unprecedented" because it denies Congress access to needed information.

Seiberling, chairman of the House Interior subcommittee on public lands and national parks, said the department already had refused to conduct briefings for his panel's staff to help prepare for hearings.

Plans for new hospital await approval of state

By SONJA PAYTON DTH Staff Writer

Plans to build a new hospital in Chapel Hill will resume when the Hospital Corporation of America resubmits its application to the state of North Carolina.

The Nashville-based company, which builds and operates private hospitals, repital, said that the new hospital would provide a needed alternative.

"It's not that patients are complaining, but there is time and distance involved." he said.

Senior and Ford both expressed confidence that HCA's application would meet approval from the state.

and the 25,864-acre area in the Croatan National Forest. The 13,000-acre tract of Green Swamp was preserved for nature while the rest of the swamp was being drained and converted to farmland, said Chuck Roe of the Department of Natural Resources. "It's a small fraction of the swamp," he said.

Twenty-six thousand acres of the Croatan National Forest were designated to be national wilderness.

Other pocosin areas in North Carolina are located in Pender County, Holly Shelter and Angola Bay. The problem, said Roe, was that there was every little pocosin area protected in the northern part of the state. The next area scheduled for study will be the area around the Alligator river near the North. This area had the greatest possibility for land preserving and peat mining, he said.

"We hope that certain areas can successfully be preserved to protect the habitat," Roe said.

cently withdrew its Certificate of Need application to avoid complications with the Capital Health Systems Agency, which is scheduled to close soon.

The CHSA is an agency which reviews need certificate applications and makes recommendations to the state. After it closes, all applications will go directly to the state for approval.

David Ford, a departmental director with HCA, said the proposal for a new hospital came about as a result of needs expressed by local doctors. Area doctors have expressed dissatisfaction because North Carolina Memorial Hospital hires the majority of its staff from the UNC Schools of Medicine and Dentistry, he said.

Robert Senior, a Chapel Hill physician, is one of many doctors here who must admit their patients to hospitals outside of Orange County.

Senior, whose patients are usually admitted to Durham County General Hos-

The Certificate of Need Agency, a branch of the Department of Human Resources, must approve the application before a hospital can be built.

Olivia Flemming of the agency said only "needed facilities" would be built. She said Chapel Hill was already "overbedded," which resulted in a high fixed cost for unused beds. The Certificate of Needs office must consider efficient operating costs, health care costs and the utilization of beds.

NCMH Director Eric Munson said it was important in this case to distinguish between the needs of doctors and those of the general public.

"There are, in fact, three very good hospitals - NCMH, Duke and Durham County General Hospital - already operating in this area," he said.

The HCA, which also operates hospitals in Raleigh, Statesville and Tarboro, hs chosen a site off U.S. 15-501 near Erwin Road for the new hospital.
