Rain pushes back library move

By CHARLOTTE HOLMES Staff Writer

Although construction delays have pushed the move from Wilson to Walter B. Davis library from January to May 1983, students should not experience many problems in using the libraries' stacks during the move, library officials have said.

The move, initially set for May 1982, has been pushed back to January 1983, said University Librarian James Govan. The Davis library should be open for student use in mid-February, he said.

Chapel Hill's recent period of rain may have been a factor in the construction delay, said University Planning Director Gordon Rutherford. "It is inevitable that the opening date will be postponed."

Workers are now putting the roofing in, which will enable interior construction to begin. The advent of warmer weather will speed up the building process, Rutherford said.

Although the move will take place during the regular semester instead of the summer session as originally proposed, moving plans have not been changed, Govan said.

"Everyone will have to be tolerant during this transfer," he said. "We will contract a professional moving service for the job, and we have a well-researched plan to follow.'

Govan expressed confidence in the plans laid out for Wilson library's move.

"Library administrators have visited other college libraries that have moved to other locations, so that we could develop a reliable, organized plan," Govan said. There may be some confusion finding books once the transfer begins, but large signs will be posted daily outside Wilson, and notices will be placed in The Daily Tar Heel showing new locations for books, he added.

Once the circulation department has been completely transferred, the staff will have books that cannot be located paged from Wilson to Davis.

During the course of the transfer, Wilson library will close for one full weekend, said Larry Alford, head of the circulation department at Wilson library.

"We will notify students at least six weeks before the weekend we plan to close," he said. "By this time, 40 percent of the book collection will have been transferred."

The library is committed to remaining open through the most difficult time of the semester - during and before final exams.

If the Davis library is ready in January, renovations in Wilson will begin in May 1983, Rutherford said, "Most of the work will be on the older portion of the building to accommodate for public programs."

UNC pathologist to give lecture 'DTH' writers

Nancy Salleeby, a speech language pathologist at the Speech and Hearing Center, will lecture on "Practical Applications: Central Auditory Processing Deficits" today at 12:30 p.m.

The lecture, the first in a special series, will be held in room 83, Wing D of the UNC Medical School. The lecture is free, and interested students and community members are invited to attend.

The UNC chapter of the National Student Speech Language Hearing Association, in conjunction with the Division of Speech and Hearing Sciences, is sponsoring the lecture series.

to meet today

The results of The DTH writing test have been posted outside of the DTH offices. All new staff members must attend a meeting at 5 p.m. Wednesday, March 3. Please meet at the DTH offices.

Pre-orientation counselors to be trained

Students applying to be Pre-Orientation Counselors will undergo the same training as Orientation Counselors this year, Brent Lister, chairperson of the Orientation Commission, said Tuesday.

The selection process will also be more coordinated than in past years, he said. "The interviews for the Pre-Orientation Counselors and the Orientation paths you can go by, but in the long run there's still time to change the road you're on.'

"When you play this backwards the same verse says 'My sweet satan, the one whose path makes me sad, whose power is satan," he said. "It's there, people," he said, adding that backward masking is a part of many other groups productions. Long said he thought that the punk bands of today encourage an attitude of nihilism, the feeling that life is without meaning. This is obviously satanic, Long said. He used punk slam or bash dancing as manifestations of nihilism. Slam dancing includes sewing one-sided razor blades onto clothing so that blood can be drawn as the dancers slam into one another, Long said. Long backed his charges of satanic perversion with Biblical scriptures about violence and pagan activities.

Another way in which these groups publicize their satanic ideals is through different forms of black magic symbolism, he said. These incude circles with wings, pentagrams and hexagrams, Long said.

But Long did not advocate album-burning sessions in protest of rock music. "I just want people to listen and make up their own minds," he said.

Long's tape was recently aired in the Triangle area on a six-and-a-half minute television spot on WTVD-Channel 11.

In the past, Pre-Orientation Counselors have been selected by application only.

Although training for the counselors will also be coordinated, Pre-Orientation will still be directed toward minority students. "Pre-Orientation is different in name and intent," Lister said.

"I know that there are probably a lot of people laughing right now about this," Long said. "When I heard all this stuff about five months ago I was laughing too," he said. "But I'm not laughing now."

Student Body President Mike Vandenbergh said the CGC should look carefully at the legislations passed by the last council. "I want to have laws passed which will help us avoid suits by disgruntled groups," he said.

Vandenbergh said the council would not be endangered by putting in a form of the clause which the last CGC removed. "You can't get sued for deciding they (groups applying for CGC funds) are not of a high priority, (for funding)" he said.

The Supreme Court ruling in the Missouri case did not imply that the university had to allow the religious group access to funds, Nakell said.

"The Missouri case was rightly decided," he said. "But that (the Supreme Court ruling) assumes the facilities are available. Funds are different; funds are limited," he said.

The training coordination represents nothing radically different in intention, said Fred Schroeder, director of the department of student life.

Students wanting to apply for either position must turn in applications by Friday. Applications are available in Steele Building, the Carolina Union desk and area director offices.

said. "We are the first state in the nation to assume this responsibility.

"The state adopts and enforces the EPA regulations, and they have set up their own Hazardous Waste Management Board to review the EPA standards, which deal with such issues as distance of the landfill from wells used for human consumption, separation from the water table and permeability of the soil."

New regulations prohibit the burial of toxic liquids. Toxic materials must now be solidified before being buried.

"I fully support the new regulations," Willhoit said. "Wastes should be buried only after all other means of getting rid of them have been tried."

PCBs, heavy metals and pesticides are listed as possible toxic wastes buried at the landfill located off Airport Road near Horace Williams Airport. It is not known how much of which substances are buried there, Willhoit said.

The toxic wastes were put into gallon bottles, placed upright in carefully dug holes at the site, surrounded by absorbent was shaped and compacted so that water would not puddle and then was planted with groundcover. Three monitoring water around the site at least twice a year, Willhoit said.

The landfill, used up until 1973, is not
