

N.C. students learn through participation in legislative process

By SUZETTE ROACH
Staff Writer

College students from across the state interested in politics are meeting in Raleigh this week for the 1982 Annual Session of the North Carolina Student Legislature.

More than 200 students, including a delegation of 40 to 50 from UNC, are expected to attend the 45th annual session, said Joe D'Amico, the UNC chapter's delegation chairperson. During the session, which begins today and runs through Sunday, NCSL members will debate legislation they have been drawing up during the year, vote on officers for the statewide organization and attend social events, including a banquet Saturday night and an alumni reception, D'Amico said.

The North Carolina Student Legislature is an educational organization which gives students an opportunity to learn about and participate in the legislative process, D'Amico said. Each campus group holds weekly meetings where resolutions are drawn up. The resolutions are debated at monthly Interim Council meetings, which are held at different schools in the state.

Members prepare for the annual session all year, D'Amico said. Each delegation is allowed to submit two bills at the annual session.

During the NCSL session, the bills go through committees, where they are amended, rejected or accepted. They are then debated by a House and Senate. The bills that pass are sent to the North Carolina General Assembly, D'Amico said 40 percent of the bills recommended by NCSL eventually become law.

The UNC delegation submitted a bill in February that would allow television coverage of trials and a bill that would streamline the regulations for becoming a Certified Public Accountant in North Carolina.

D'Amico, a sophomore, is running for governor of the statewide organization. If he wins, the state administration of the organization will come to UNC. Sophomore David Knieriem is running for attorney general.

Sarah Evans, author of Personal Politics, will discuss the women's movement in America tonight at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall.

Evans, a professor of history at the University of Minnesota, will speak on "Feminism as History and Politics in the 1980s."

Prior to Evans' lecture, there will be a panel discussion on "Lobbyists and Legislators" at 4 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. Participants include N.C. Reps. Dan Blue and Bertha Holt and N.C. Sen. Gerry Hancock.

Also included in today's symposium events is a Pit Fair to be held from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Pit. The fair will feature various lobbying groups distributing literature and speaking for short periods of time.
