

Judge seeks options

By MELISSA MOORE
Staff Writer

Imprisonment should not be the only available method of punishment in our criminal justice system, said Judge Willis P. Whichard of the N.C. Court of Appeals and chairman of the N.C. Commission on Alternatives of Incarceration.

Whichard, a former UNC law student, spoke to an audience of about 45 Friday afternoon at the UNC School of Law.

The prison system has many problems, Whichard said. One is the high cost of imprisonment. "It costs us at least $8,000 per prisoner per year," he said. This amount does not include the cost of construction of prison cells or hidden costs such as offenders' inability to pay restitution or to support their families.

"There's no prospect for change in that (cost) if we continue to incarcerate at this rate," he said.

Whichard said the prison system is an appropriate one for people who commit violent crimes but that "violent offenders constitute a small minority of those we incarcerate," and offered alternatives to imprisonment.

One of these is restitution in which the offender pays the victim. This is a common practice now but is not institutionalized as an alternative to incarceration. The danger in this is that affluent people could buy their way out of prison; thus the challenge would be to find a means appropriate for both the victim and the offender.

Another option is restitution to society, since crime harms both the victim and society, Whichard said. The offender could be required to work in areas of public need, thus losing time not money doing things for society which it would otherwise have to pay for or do without.

Whichard also said, "We could expand the use of fines (that would benefit society) as punishment" but the amount of the fine should be based on the seriousness of the offense and the ability of the offender to pay. Otherwise, the practice would be discriminatory, he said.

Whichard also named probation as a possible alternative to incarceration, adding that the cost of probation is $1 per day as opposed to the $8,000 per year cost of imprisonment.

"The prison should not be viewed as an easy out," he said.

Priest says U.S. must alter role in El Salvador

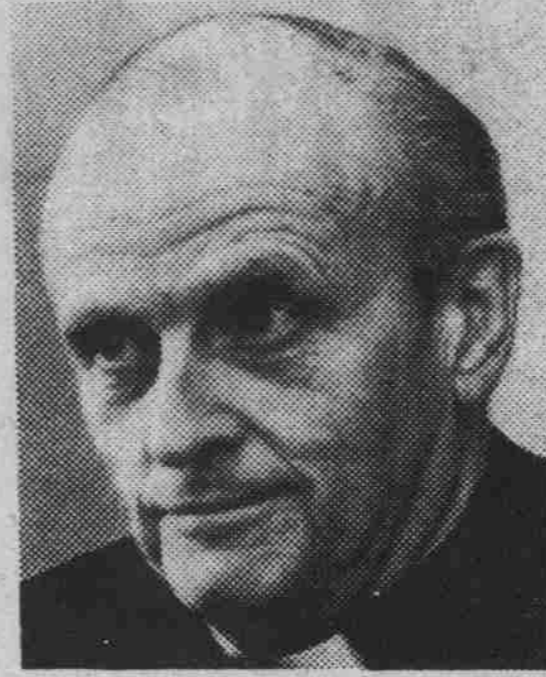

By KEN SIMAN
Staff Writer

American involvement in El Salvador is "the new agony of our day," Father Robert Drinan said Saturday in a speech at the Chapel Hill Community Church.

Drinan, a former Massachusetts Congressman and current President of Americans for Democratic Action, spoke before a group of about 200 members of the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union.

Drinan refuted the assertion by President Ronald Reagan's administration that Salvadoran rebels are infiltrated by Communists. "By centering on El Salvador and saying this is a confrontation between East and West (Reagan) shows the ridiculousness of the entire foreign policy approach of the administration," Drinan said.

The civil war in El Salvador is a "confrontation going back 50 to 60 years ... and the alleged infiltration of Communists or Cubans really has nothing to do with (the civil war) at all," Drinan said.

Robert Drinan

Sunday's national election in El Salvador cannot be considered fair, Drinan said, because there are no liberals on the ballot. There are "no choices to make. 'You can vote for the right or the far right.'"

Drinan said he expected the Reagan administration to attribute the absence of the left in Sunday's election to their fear of losing. The real reason for the void of liberal alternatives, Drinan said, was a fear of death, not defeat, because liberal candidates would have been placed on the military's "hit list."

"The U.S. in effect is supervising an election which we know ahead of time can't really be a free election," he said.

Drinan said Reagan's foreign policy is, resulting in a re-emergence of a "Red Scare ... and the test somehow is in El Salvador."

"The Red Scare came about in the 1950s because (the late Sen.) Joe McCarthy was saying 'Who lost China?'" Drinan said. "Will we have in this country today 'Who lost El Salvador?'"

Author says accelerated arms race should cease

By ROSEMARY OSBORN
Staff Writer

"We fool ourselves into believing more weapons will ward off an attack," said Richard Barnet as he delivered a speech Thursday entitled "The Future in Our Hands — Freeze the Arms Race."

Speaking to a near capacity crowd in Gerrard Hall, Barnet said it is time to say "enough is enough" to the arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Barnet, author of Who Wants Disarmament and Real Security, said, "we all fall into the trap of using Orwellian language and say there is safety where there is no safety."

"The myth of defense where there is no defense is the most dangerous way to destroy the hope of a nation," Barnet said. He explained that both the United States and the Soviet Union build weapons in hopes of keeping the other nation in fear. But, he said, one nation cannot build enough weapons to make it safe from the other nation.

The "myth of deterrence" is also of concern to us Barnet said. "One has to assume one is dealing with rational people. Agreements must be based on an understanding of reality. There are 20,000 weapons aimed at the Soviet Union and if this isn't enough, 300,000 won't be enough."

"The debate between hawks and doves isn't over how many weapons the U.S. and the Soviets have. What divides hawks and doves is a view of human nature which rests on the idea of reaching a magic number of casualties."

"It has been the policy of the United States to reserve the right to use nuclear weapons in the face of a non-nuclear attack. That is the policy our defense has been based on."

Barnet said the Soviet Union did not enter the arms race until after the Cuban Missile Crisis. Before this time, the United States was in a race against itself, he said.

When the Soviet Union gained the ability to destroy the United States, the United States lost its superiority. Barnet maintained that the arms race became useless from this point onward because neither side could really get an advantage in its defense.

Barnet said it was a myth that a side could spend enough on defense to be safe. He criticized the Reagan administration for taking the attitude that increased spending would mean increased national security.

"Enough is enough. We can afford to take a breather. We can develop an alternative defense system," he said. Barnet said he favored a freeze on the arms race. "A freeze at least creates the space where we can come up with something more acceptable."

juana. Although marijuana and drinking combined may have contributed to 25 of the accidents, McBay said only one of the drivers was affected by marijuana alone.

"I think the significance of this study is that, with the exception of alcohol, we found relatively few drugs of abuse or addiction in the blood of drivers who died in single-vehicle accidents," McBay said.

The only major drug excluded from the study was Valium, because there is evidence that it has little effect on drivers. Tests for amphetamines were discontinued after 340 samples because none were found. And of the samples containing any drugs, most contained significant amounts of alcohol also.

Dr. Page Hudson, professor of pathology and Chief Medical Examiner, called the study the finest of its kind to date and said data from the study might be used in support of the fight to raise the minimum age for the legal sale chase of alcohol from 18 to 21.

Hudson also said he hoped the study would help reduce the nearly hysterical concern manifested by some of the public over the so-called epidemic of drug-related accidents.

"Let's tackle the giant problem of alcohol abuse before we come unglued about the relatively dwarf issue of driving under the influence of drugs," he said.

The study was made with the cooperation of the Highway Patrol and the UNC School of Medicine. The $300,000 funding was primarily paid for by the Governor's Highway Safety Program.
