

Students in line for football tickets get out of hand

By R.L. BYNUM
Staff Writer

Melanie Ray has bruises on her arm, a painful nose and terrible State tickets to show for her "disgusting" experience Wednesday morning as students lined up to get tickets to Saturday's game broke into a mad rush.

In a scene that was much less tragic, yet similar to the vicious crowd that shoved its way into a Who concert in Cincinnati, the previously organized line became a pushing and shoving mob as 5 a.m. approached.

"Everything was going reasonably well until five," said Joseph Berryhill, a junior, who after waiting for two nights to get seats, gave up in disgust at the uncontrollable crowd.

"At five, everyone started leaving their spots and made the line more compact,"

Berryhill said. "It was raining and everyone was tired and short-tempered."

At 6 a.m., ushers had planned to go through the line and straighten it out in two-by-two form.

"What happened," said senior Tripp Flack, "is that before they opened the door (for the students), the janitor opened the door for the ushers (to try and straighten the line), and that's when the massive rush began."

Ray, a 5-foot-4-inch junior, suffered a bloody nose in the rush to enter the arena. "I was shoved into the back of this one guy and another guy beside me (who was taller) elbowed me in the nose, and I had a nosebleed for about an hour."

"I had a pack of doughnuts in my backpack. After I finally got inside, the box was half an inch thick. I couldn't believe it. It was really pathetic," said

Ray, who doubts it will be worth sleeping out again.

"I slept out for the Clemson game last year, and the crowd was just as big, but the pushing wasn't nearly as bad."

After sleeping out for two nights at her group's position in front of the North gate of Carmichael Auditorium on Raleigh Street, she ended up on the first row of a section in the stadium.

"There were friends of mine that were 15 rows ahead of me inside that I know were at least 20 groups behind me in line (outside). I just can't believe people are really like this. It's hard to describe. It was unreal."

Ray, who received a Section 17, Row A seat, said there were people who had not been standing in line waiting on the intramural field who dashed for the door at 6 a.m. By the time people started rushing the door, the "line" had widened from the glass doors of Carmichael to the fence that borders the intramural field.

Although Dr. James McCutchan, head of the Clinical Medical Section of the Student Health Services said the SHS did treat some people for injured feet and sprained ankles, he did not know if any of the injuries were sustained in the ticket line.

Ray suggested that when there was such a long line far in advance of the actual distribution time, that everyone should be given numbers a few hours before Carmichael is opened.

Berryhill, who will have to settle for end zone seats, suggested that tickets be given out randomly to take away any incentive to wait out so early.

"I had a lot of work I could have been doing instead of waiting," he said. "It's just a shame that it turned into such a dangerous situation."

mained by the ESC does not include the discouraged, who have given up looking for work because they don't believe there are any jobs available.

"No one knows what true unemployment is anywhere," he said. "We do well if we get the trend right."

The Orange County Employment and Training center has had relative success in finding jobs and providing job skills for the unemployed of the county. Comprehensive Education and Training Act director Ernest Mangum said. The center has a success rate of more than 85 percent, with participants either finding jobs or entering school.

"In a year's time, better than 300 people come through this program (CETA)," he said. An additional 50-60 persons are placed in jobs within the private sector without training.

Most of the available jobs in Orange County are in highly technical areas. Mangum said some jobs have opened up in the retail sales market. Many of those who seek help from the center, however, have few or no skills and require basic education, he said.

Another result of the war was a strengthening of the U.S. position and a weakening of the Russian position in the Middle East, Curtis said.

Curtis also described the current situation in Israel.

"Forgetting the tense and traumatic events of September, we see that we're dealing with a period of considerable uncertainty and flux," Curtis said. The change is the result of "intense ideological differences" within the Israeli political arena.

A demographic shift in population has created the relatively recent development of ethnicity influencing party alliances in Israel, Curtis said.

An increasing number of Israelites of Oriental descent has meant a gradual move away from the Labor Party that has been traditionally associated with East Europeans. The Oriental community now represents a majority of 55 percent to 65 percent in Israel, Curtis said.

"The most significant factor in recent elections has been the introduction of ethnicity," Curtis said.

"I think if the executive assistant allows it to, it does. But it doesn't happen inherently," he said.

In the Norberg administration, there were four executive assistants and 11 cabinet heads. Only one of Norberg's executive assistants oversaw the committees.

Norberg said his committee chairpersons were able to accomplish more because they had much responsibility. He named the race relations class and the liaison program as examples of committee accomplishments.

But executive assistant Donald Beeson, who oversees four university services committees, said there were problems with the Norberg administration.

Beeson has served in Student Government since 1979, and headed the University Services Committee under Norberg until his resignation in October, 1981.

"Scott and I had some very different philosophies of Student Government," Beeson said. "At times, it was more of a dictatorship thing. He did alienate people on his staff as much as possible."

"That's changed a lot," he said. "We are making more responsible decisions and that's because we are involving people more in decisions."

Israel

"What already is changing the face of the West Bank are suburbs which are settled by normal or ordinary people," Benvenisti said.

"We should see with five years almost 100,000 Jews living in the West Bank — not in settlements, not in outposts."

These Jewish people will live in ordinary cities.

This trend toward a higher Jewish population will have profound effects on the political structure, he said.

"The implications of the trend are enormous. If there will be 100,000 Jews living in the West Bank in the next four or five years... 50,000 people, adults, voters represent exactly the margin between winning and losing elections in Israel," he said.

No party would be able to declare that the West Bank area should be evacuated. "The pressure point that is not being built in these areas will make this kind of move almost impossible," Benvenisti said.

Already, Israelis settling in the West Bank have "almost made that part of the country an integral part of Israel," he said.

Begin's future depends on many factors, Benvenisti said. As a leading consultant to the Begin and President Ronald Reagan administrations, Benvenisti said he knew that economic situations, timing factors and current mood must be considered. If Israelis held elections tomorrow, however, he said Begin would triumph.

The B'nai B'rith Lodge in Durham and the Hillel Foundation of North Carolina co-sponsored Benvenisti's speech. He is currently in the United States to seek funding for a proposed survey on the West Bank situation.

TWO OF THE NICEST, SWEETEST GUYS EVER TO PLAY FOOTBALL ON DRINKIN' DOWN BEER AND EATIN' UP QUARTERBACKS

by Bubba Smith and Dick Butkus

BUBBA: Now that we're not playin' football anymore, we spend more time poppin' tops off cans of Lite Beer from Miller than poppin' quarterbacks.

DICK: But our favorite topic of conversation over a couple of Lite Beers is still the art of playin' defense.

BUBBA: Yeah. The bigger we were, the harder they fell.

DICK: Very true. Being big helps give you presence. What I call winning through intimidation.

BUBBA: But you also have to play smart. Like watching the guy in front of you for a tip. Sometimes the position of a guard's feet'll tell you where he's gonna go once the ball is hiked. Feet can tell you a lot. I guess that's why shoes have tongues.

DICK: But smart guys remember they're on a team. Work with a partner. Try to draw players, so maybe he can get through.

This technique also works well when you want to get a Lite Beer in a crowded bar. BUBBA: And drinkin' Lite Beer is one of the smartest things you can do. Because Lite's less fillin', so it won't slow you down.

DICK: Sure. And even though we're not playin' anymore, after years of eatin' up quarterbacks, it's nice to relax with the great taste of Lite Beer.

BUBBA: You might say we've gone from being heavy hitters to Lite drinkers. Right, Mr. Butkus?
