IRA blamed for deaths of 3 police

The Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Three policemen, lured to a lonely road by the IRA, were killed Wednesday by one of the biggest terrorist bombs in Northern Ireland's bloody history. Sixty miles to the north in Larne, County Antrim, two men burst into a Roman Catholic man's apartment, tied him to a chair and slowly cut his hand off with a hacksaw, police said. A second man in the apartment managed to escape by jumping from the third-floor bathroom window, the report said.

Surgeons later sewed the hand of 34-year-old William Kelly back on, and he was reported in stable condition in Larne hospital, authorities said.

There was no immediate indication of the identities of Kelly's assailants, police said.

The bomb in County Armagh, detonated by remote control, blew the three policemen's patrol car apart on a rural road near Lurgan, 30 miles south of Belfast. The victims, two constables and a sergeant, were members of the mostly Protestant Royal Ulster Constabulary.

The blast left a crater 60 feet wide and 40 feet deep and blew the armor-plated car into a field 30 yards away, police said. The bodies of the three officers had to be cut from the wreckage by firemen.

The Irish Republican Army, the mostly Roman Catholic nationalist guerrillas fighting to end British rule in the province, claimed responsibility in a telephone call to the British Broadcasting Corp.

The ambush came hours after a bishop told mourners at the Belfast funeral of a Catholic kidnap victim that a "madly careening engine of terror" was raging out of control in the British province.

Police estimated that 1,000 pounds of explosive had been planted under the Lurgan road near a traffic circle.

"The bomb must have been a massive one, certainly one of the largest ever used in the province," said a police spokesman. Police said the trap was laid with a telephone call.

"A call was placed to Lurgan police station that there had been an armed robbery and this was designed to lure police in the area. Within minutes a patrol vehicle was there," a spokesman said.

The blast was heard five miles away. Police said two suspects were seen driving away from the blast area in a stolen car, later found abandoned.

Chief Constable Sir Jack Hermon, in Lurgan for a school ceremony, went to the scene and told reporters he was filled with "horror and sadness." Eleven Lurgan policemen have been slain by terrorists since 1972 and nine police officers have been murdered throughout the province this year.

Police had warned of an upsurge in terrorism following the election last week of five members of the IRA's legal political front, Sinn Fein, to the new 78-seat Northern Ireland Assembly.

There have been 12 murders in the province in the past month, including retaliatory killings by Catholic and Protestant extremists.

More than 2,000 mourners packed St. John's Church in predominantly Catholic west Belfast for the funeral of Joseph Donegan, 48-year-old father of seven whose body, so badly beaten he was unrecognizable, was found Monday in an alley off Shankill Road in the capital's Protestant sector.

With troops and police still scouring the countryside for the body of Thomas Cochrane, a 55-year-old Protestant militiaman the IRA claims to have killed, Bishop Cahal Daly told the congregation there was no distinction between the sorrow of Catholics and Protestants.

Protestant workers at Belfast City Cemetery were advised to stay away from Donegan's burial, after a death threat from Catholic extremists.
