

Springfest gets $1,000

By CHARLES ELLMAKER
Staff Writer

The Campus Governing Council Wednesday appropriated $1,000 to Henderson Residence College for the Springfest concert, a move which some CGC members felt might seriously damage chances for approval of the 1983 Chapel Thrill concert.

CGC Speaker Pro Tem James Exum (District 15) expressed concern about the effects of passing the Springfest appropriation.

"I don't know if I've made up my mind about Chapel Thrill. If we pass Springfest, we won't kill Chapel Thrill, but we'll seriously injure it," Exum said.

Springfest is scheduled for the weekend of April 16, just one week before the proposed Chapel Thrill date, HRC Governor Henry Miles told the council.

"I don't think this will affect the council's decision about Chapel Thrill," Miles said Thursday. "I think people will be willing to go to both. I'm not trying to compete."

Ben Lee, Student Government's Chapel Thrill Committee Chairman, said he did not see why Springfest should affect Chapel Thrill.

"I don't know how this will affect the CGC's decision," Lee said Thursday. "As far as people go, I don't think Springfest will hurt us. Heck, we're working together."

Lee will present his final Chapel Thrill proposal to the CGC Finance Committee Tuesday night.

Exum moved to table the Springfest appropriation until the Chapel Thrill concert is finalized, but Finance Committee member Dan Bryson (District 18) said it was not fair to decide whether to help fund Springfest on the basis of the Chapel Thrill funding.

"It's unfair to penalize Springfest when they've prepared months in advance," Bryson said Wednesday. "And it's not fair that we'd consider giving Chapel Thrill $100,000 and not give Springfest $1,000 for a concert that can draw half as many people."

Several CGC members said they disapproved of using student fees "to throw beer bashes."

CGC member Lori Dostal (District 5) said she was shocked that the CGC would help sponsor concerts.

"The whole idea is ridiculous that we're spending student fees on beer parties," Dostal said. "I just can't believe we're sponsoring these concerts in the first place."

But other council members said Springfest was a good use of student fees because so many students could be affected through the expenditure of so few dollars. Bryson said Springfest would be "giving students something they really want to see."

Student Affairs Committee Chairman Dennis Bartels (District 10) said it was easier for council members to fund Springfest than Chapel Thrill.

"There are some real differences between Chapel Thrill and Springfest," Bartels said. "(Springfest) is open to all students — there is no $10 admission ticket — and the cost effectiveness is very good."

The appropriation passed with a 10-9 vote; Student Body President Mike Vandenberg abstained from voting.

Miles said Springfest's $3,000 budget would provide students with a free concert on Connor Beach featuring both local and regional bands over a two-day period.

"This concert will bring people from all over the student community," Miles said. "We'll bring people from South Campus, the Greek houses and from off campus." A beverage distributor will probably help bear the cost of the concert, he said.

"Ideally, we'd like to get Coca-Cola (as a sponsor)," Miles said. "But if we do get a beer distributor, they won't be supplying any beer."

In other action, the CGC appropriated $193 to the Association of Women Students so that revenue funds forfeited last year would be restored to that organization.

Finance Committee Chairperson Charlie Madison (District 23) said AWS had negotiated a deal with Chapel Thrill last year under which AWS would sell concessions during the concert for a fee of $225. AWS agreed that concessioners would pay for their admission tickets, and Chapel Thrill agreed not to pay AWS the fee until after May 15 so that the funds would not revert back to the Student Government General Reserve.

Part of the funds appropriated to the AWS will go toward reimbursing members for the money they paid to go to Chapel Thrill.

The $193 will be added to $32 that did not revert back to the General Reserve last year.

The CGC also passed bills focusing on proposals to raise the drinking age and to institute a nuclear freeze.

The first bill opposed the raising of the drinking age in North Carolina to 21 and called for stricter enforcement of current drunk driving laws in the state.

The proposal originally opposed raising the age above 18, but many council members supported raising the drinking age to 19, saying that would make it more difficult for high school students to obtain alcohol.

The second resolution called for a nuclear arms freeze agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union. The bill was passed 8-6, with one abstention.

But many members, while supporting the freeze in theory, expressed skepticism about the actual effects of such a freeze.

Rules and Judiciary Committee Chairperson Phil Painter (District 19) said he supported the freeze, but thought it would compromise U.S. national security.

Other Council members said they did not think it was the place of the CGC to voice an opinion for the entire student body on this type of issue.

Morehead the place to be today to see occultation, two programs

By DANE HUFFMAN
Staff Writer

If you want to see some heavenly bodies this afternoon, you might try the Morehead Planetarium.

Between 5:06 and 5:26 p.m. today, the moon will pass in front of Mars, and the planetarium will sponsor two special programs for the event. "Occultations and Other Celestial Alignments" begins in the sky theater at 4 p.m., and admission is $1. An occultation is an eclipse of a planet or star by a body other than the sun, said Lee T. Shapiro, director of the Morehead Planetarium at UNC. "We'll duplicate a solar eclipse and a lunar eclipse inside the planetarium."

After the half-hour show, there will be a free observing session from 4:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. The planetarium will provide several small telescopes, but participants should bring binoculars if possible.

Mars should begin to pass behind the moon at about 5 p.m.

But another celestial phenomenon — sunset — will be at 5:06 p.m. and could interfere with the chances of seeing the first phase of the occultation.

"Even though it may be difficult to detect the actual time of disappearance or reappearance, there is still the opportunity after the reappearance to view the moon and Mars very close together in the sky," Shapiro said. Mars should reappear on the other side of the moon at about 5:26 p.m.

"When Mars re-emerges from behind the moon, that should be visible," he said.

Shapiro said the occultation would occur about 20 degrees over the horizon in a south by southwest direction, the event can only be seen in parts of the Carolinas and southeastern Virginia.

If the weather is cloudy, Shapiro said the planetarium would still have the show inside but would not hold the viewing session.

Minority Law Day to provide information

"Carolina Minority Law Day," an informational program about law school for all interested or prospective minority law school students, will be held today from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the UNC School of Law on Ridge Lane.

The open house program is sponsored by the law school in conjunction with the Black American Law Association and the Student Bar Association. There is no admission charge.

The program is designed to clarify to current and future students what is expected of a law student. Discussion topics will include pressures, time and work demand and necessary skills for the minority law students.

The program will also inform participating minority students of how best to prepare for law school, as well as explain the admission and financial aid policies of the University, sponsors said.

A discussion of the LSAT will be conducted at 9 a.m. and will emphasize the skills that are required for taking the test.

"This is a well-established program which has been going on for about 10 years," said Harold Wallace, vice chancellor of university affairs. "It will give minority students an idea of what the law school is all about."

Any student wishing to participate in "Carolina Minority Law Day" should contact Tom Trujillo, assistant dean of the law school, at 962-5106.

Mauer charged in rape; preliminary hearing Dec. 7

Richard Eugene Mauer, 47, an unsuccessful candidate in last June's Orange County sheriff's race, was arrested Wednesday and charged with raping a 7-year-old girl on Oct. 8.

According to the records in the district attorney's office, the hearing is scheduled for Dec. 7. Bond has been set at $10,000.

When asked for comment, Mrs. Mauer replied, "This is a personal family matter and shouldn't even be in the papers."

Mauer came in last in a field of six candidates who ran in the Democratic primary for county sheriff in last year's election. He also ran unsuccessfully in the 1978 sheriff race.

School of Nursing to have open house; workshop to address eating disorders

Get into Nursing in the Eighties, an open house offered by the UNC School of Nursing, will be held Saturday from noon to 2:30 p.m. in Carrington Hall.

Students may have their blood pressure, vision, hearing and blood type checked for free by nurses from the Student Health Center. The Skills Lab will hold a CPR demonstration, examine an isolette for newborns and offer an EKG demonstration.

There will also be a display on different approaches to family planning, an exhibition of organ specimens and an exhibition of a birthing box.

Juniors and seniors in the School of Nursing will be on hand to answer questions about the nursing program at UNC. Refreshments will be served.

"Pursuit to Thinness: Anorexia Nervosa and Bulimia," a workshop designed to educate professionals and para-professionals working with adolescents on current issues in eating disorders. Prevention and intervention methods for anorexia and bulimia also will be discussed.

The workshops, which offer .63 Continuing Education Units, will be held from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 20 in Carrington Hall of the nursing school. The fee is $30. For more information, call 966-3638.
