agenda

ment, said SPTES chairperson Paul Parker. The SPTES would also solicit appropriations from the CGC on its own, rather than as a part of Student Government.
On tap from the Town Relations Committee is a pamphlet which would educate students about life in Chapel Hill by supplying important information such as voter registration and noise ordinance regulations.

In addition, Student Government will do something for itself and work to improve its constitution. The last time the constitution was revised was in 1976, and the rules need an overhaul, Vandenberg said.
And, of course, Suite C will be keeping its eye on food service. The proposal to renovate campus food facilities at a cost of $5 million should soon be up for consideration in the General Assembly and administrators and student leaders alike will all sleep easier at night if the plan is approved.

Timing of the issue is critical, though, because complex financial arrangements must be worked out before renovations can begin, Charles Antle, associate vice chancellor for business, said Wednesday.

"We are hoping it will be as early in the session as possible," he said.

loans

In November, Bell announced that new restrictions on another major loan program, the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, resulted in a 22 percent decrease in the number of GSLs awarded this year over 1981-82. The new requirements call for students from families earning more than $30,000 per year to demonstrate financial need before receiving a GSL.

The new GSL restrictions will have less impact on North Carolina residents, Broadway said.

"Because North Carolina has a lower family income level, the effect of the $30,000 eligibility exclusion is not that severe," he said.

GSL recipients apply for loans through their state of residence rather than through their institution. The Raleigh-based College Foundation arranges GSLs for North Carolina residents.

GSLs, which are made at 9 percent interest, become due six months after a student leaves school and are payable over a 10-year period.

Some UNC administrators have opposed a 1983 Chapel Hill concert because of last year's problems with drinking, vandalism and out-of-towners. Do you think these problems are avoidable with an outdoor spring concert?

Ron Lattanze, sophomore history major, Charlotte: "No. They're unavoidable. But the concert's still a lot of fun. We should have it."

John Bilich, freshman RTVMP major, Cincinnati, Ohio: "I think the students can assume responsibility for the concert. I think that if they are threatened with cancellation of the concert, they will try to control problems. The students should be able to improve things, so that the administration won't complain."

Thalia Bowen, senior industrial relations major, Bolton: "I wouldn't say that they're unavoidable. They could be handled better than they are. I'm sure that some of the problems could be eliminated. The concert is for the students. It's stupid to say anything is unavoidable."

Adrienne Meddock, junior political science major, Love Valley: "I think that it is all part of what you should expect with a concert. It is not a problem that just happens to Chapel Hill. It's something that's going to happen with all concerts."

Jay Klompmaker, associate professor, UNC School of Business Administration: "I have a hard time believing that they're unavoidable. What I know of what goes on at rock concerts, the music is related to drugs and that sort of stuff. It's like throwing a German beer party and expecting minimal drinking. You can have some kind of control. One potential for control is that of non-students. You can control the admittance for basketball games after all."

Sharon Dudley, junior RTVMP major, Boone: "The amount of damage was reasonable; it could have been expected. We should have the concert anyway. They certainly had enough security, but I don't think the cops were as effective as they could have been."
