National doctor surplus may not affect N.C.

By MELISSA MOORE Staff Writer

A nationwide study has reported that a surplus of doctors is expected by the end of the decade. But such a glut in North Carolina is not likely, the director of UNC's Area Health Education Centers program said recently.

The problem with the national study, which was compiled by the Graduate Medical Education National Advisory Committee, is that it is a study of expected averages which may apply to the country as a whole but not necessarily to North Carolina, said Dr. Eugene S. Mayer, AHEC director.

Larger cities in the country have the highest concentration of doctors, Mayer said. "I think it's unlikely we'll find surpluses in a state like this which is (mostly) rural." The state still has significant shortages of physicians in certain rural areas and small towns, he said. Three programs work to remedy that problem.

The state's Office of Rural Health, a section of the Department of Human Resources, works directly with small towns that need doctors. If it is decided a town needs a doctor, this office actively recruits physicians.

Mayer said. "That's been a very active force. The important thing is that it works directly with small towns."

But, Mayer said, "It's one thing to get a doctor to go to a small town; it's another to get a doctor to stay." Because of this problem, AHEC is bringing educational programs to small towns so the doctors are less professionally isolated.

The program makes it possible for doctors to continue their educations close to home, and to teach participating

A state office also helps to distribute North Carolina doctors, Mayer said. It recruits North Carolinians into medical schools, giving "what amounts to scholarships" if they agree to practice in a certain rural area after graduation. If the participating doctors break the agreement, the scholarship becomes a loan which must be repaid. This program "has had some success," Mayer said.

Both the AHEC and the Rural Health programs have been very effective, said Glenn Wilson, chairman of Social and Administrative Medicine at UNC. When asked how the expected national surplus might affect North Carolina, he said, "It's more difficult to set up a practice

"It's really an international problem," he said. Wilson said he thought there was a need to decrease the class size of first-year medical students in the United States. U.S. citizens should not be allowed to attend overseas medical schools and then practice in this country.

Wilson said he saw no need to decrease or increase the class size of North Carolina medical schools. No shortages or surpluses in particular fields or specialties of medicine in the state are expected. "I think we're going to have lots of doctors. I've thought so for eight years," he said.

One first-year medical student, Steve Baumrucker, is familiar with AHEC programs because his brother teaches as an AHEC physician in another area. "He (the brother) thinks it works real well. He says students learn a lot." The students get practical experience, unlike the usual student experience in Chapel Hill, he said.

Steve Baumrucker said after graduation he would probably work in a rural area. He said, "I'd probably become an AHEC-type person."

From 1970 to 1977, 54 percent of UNC medical school graduates practiced in the state, Mayer said.

ABC's Inderfurth discusses Pentagon leaks

By KELLY SIMMONS Staff Writer

The Reagan Administration probably will not be able to stop information leaks despite the president's recent pledge to plug them, ABC News correspondent Rick Inderfurth said Tuesday.

Speaking before students in Hamilton Hall, the UNC graduate spoke about the Pentagon and the network, emphasizing precise coverage while protecting national

"Washington leaks," Inderfurth said. "Last week Reagan said he'd had it up to his keister in leaks."

Inderfurth said he doubted the president would be any more successful in stopping leaks than in the past.

"Leaks are the oil that make the government machinery move on," he said. "The Pentagon investigative team is like the gang that couldn't shoot straight. It's conducted 69 investigations of leaks since 1975 and they haven't found a single Inderfurth, former special assistant to President Carter's national security adviser Zbizniew Brzenzinski, said he had seen two sides of government leaks.

As a Pentagon correspondent, Inderfurth said he thought happenings within the Pentagon were covered well. He cited the current defense budget battle, and the controversy over the MX missile as examples of good coverage by ABC News.

Inderfurth said complex stories with little excitement were difficult to cover. "If there isn't 'bang-bang' associated with some of these stories, we find them difficult to cover," he said.

The Military Reform Movement is an issue Inderfurth said he would like to in-

It calls for strict attention in weapons selection. "They're arguing that in many cases we're buying the wrong weapons," he said. "They would, for example, like to see the Navy buy smaller aircraft carriers. They're saying that these big ships are sitting ducks, and that instead of having a lot of big ships, we should have smaller ships; we should have more eggs in the basket.

"We have a lot of technology working for us," Inderfurth said of the network. "One of the best examples of that is our show in the evening, "Nightline", whic will allow us to have an interview going on with our bureau in Washington, linked up with a European expert in London, linked up with a Soviet representative in Moscow, all talking about arms control, and it's all going on simultaneously. That is really what we do very well."

"Cronkite calls us a headline service," Inderfurth said. "That's what we're best at; to give you the headline and hope that you will go into other areas and learn more in depth."

RALEIGH - Gov. Jim Hunt proposed a $12.5 billion two-year budget Tuesday that called for increases to lift the salary freeze on state employees and teachers, based on his hopes of an improvement in the economy to finance it.

Several state senators criticized the proposal as being too optimistic on how much money will be raised.

The budget is based on predictions that the economy will begin to recover in 1983 and will bring an 8.8 percent increase in state tax revenues, primarily from personal income tax collections. No predictions were made for 1984-85. The budget also calls for spending money to improve math and science instruction and increase Medicaid contributions.

The administration predicted that tax revenues this year would increase 8.9 percent. Current budget predictions show revenue growth for 1982-83 at 5.9 percent, with a surplus of $900,000 to begin 1983-84.

Deputy State budget Officer Marvin Dorman told the joint House-Senate Appropriations Committee that there is a 60 percent chance the revenue estimates are correct. He said the biggest risk is that the economy will not begin to recover as soon as predicted.

Hunt cut spending by about $150 million to balance the budget. He made the cuts with a 6 percent across-theboard reductions, except in public schools, where cutbacks amount to 2 percent.

Special budget provisions ask the General Assembly to find money to match federal highway funds, repair and renovate state facilities and increase the travel allowance for state employees.

Hunt also recommends that private colleges and universities be allowed to submit funding requests directly to the governor, instead of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors, to avoid budget confrontations.

In the past, the UNC Board of Governors has been hesitant to ask for more money for private institutions.

The governor, with advice from the 12-member Advisory Budget Commission, prepares the budget for action by the General Assembly. But the Legislature also will get revenue estimates from its staff and budget officials predict those could be 1 percent lower.

RALEIGH - It didn't take legislators long Tuesday to begin finding fault with Gov. Jim Hunt's proposed 1983-85 budget, but most criticism focused on his economic forecast, not spending plans.

"My customers in my business are not that optimistic about 1983," said Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, a manufacturer.

Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, a budget leader, said his only problem with Hunt's proposal was "the money to do it with." Legislators planned to have their own staff members present revenue estimates Wednesday, and sources said they could be 1 percent

WASHINGTON - In a year of recession and layoffs, personal income rose just 6.4 percent in 1982, the smallest gain in nearly two decades but still enough to keep slightly ahead of inflation, government figures showed Tuesday.

Discounting the rise in prices and nudges into higher tax brackets, takehome incomes increased 1.1 percent, less than half the 2.5 percent gain of 1981 but still better than the 0.2 percent of recession-weakened 1980, according to the Commerce Department report.

A separate report, also released Tuesday by Commerce officials, showed how badly the housing industry had done last year, mostly because of high interest rates. It said builders began work on just 1,061 million new housing units, the least for any year since 1946. December's housing starts were down 13 percent from those in November.

BONN, West Germany - Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko made a new pitch to West Germany's growing anti-nuclear movement Tuesday with an offer to dismantle some of the Soviet medium-range missiles aimed at Western Europe if the Western allies cancel plans to deploy new U.S. rockets.

It was the second innovation in Soviet arms proposals advanced by Gromyko during a four-day visit to West Germany. At a dinner Monday, he said his government is prepared to negotiate an agreement for a mutual reduction of tactical missiles with a range of less than 600 miles - the first such public offer by a Soviet spokes-

It was believed to be the first time a Soviet leader said publicly that the Kremlin was willing to dismantle some middle-range nuclear weapons. Last week, separate groups of U.S. congressmen and West German officials said they had been told during visits to Moscow of the Soviets' willingness to scrap some missiles.

LONDON - Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons on Tuesday that an inquiry has cleared her government of blame in the Falkland Islands war and determined she could not have foreseen the Argentine invasion.

But the government-appointed panel said Britain's intelligence did not respond fast enough to the crisis that drew the country into a 74-day war in the South Atlantic last spring.

Opposition Labor Party legislators

nearly drowned out the prime minister with shouts of "establishment whitewash!" as she read key conclusions of the six-month investigation.

The six-member panel, headed by former British Ambassador to Washington Lord Franks, included three members of the Labor Party.

Britain's victory in its biggest military conflict since World War II carried Mrs. Thatcher to her greatest popularity. Because a general election is almost certain to be called within the year, the Conservatives could have been hurt if the panel had found the government to blame.
