

Applications being taken for '83-'84 Union president

By LIZ LUCAS
Assistant University Editor

Interested in the arts? Educational programming? Expanding your leadership ability? Then the position of president of the Carolina Union may be for you.

Applications for 1983-84 Union president are available through Jan. 28 at the Union desk. Any full-time student is eligible for the position, and no previous experience with the Union is necessary.

Though the president-elect will not officially take over until the end of the semester, duties for the remainder of this semester will include structuring the Union committees for next semester and selecting chairpersons for the committees. The president-elect also must consider long-term programs for the Union, such as the fall film schedule and the fall concert schedule, said 1982-83 Union President Wayne Plummer.

Once in office, the president presides over the Union Activities Board, the Union Board of Directors, and deals with other organizational matters — a job that takes up an average of 18-20 hours a week, he said.

"Anyone with a real interest in arts or in educational programming in general will enjoy this position," Plummer said.

"It (being Union president) is a very challenging job — it's not as visible as student body president because the position is not elected by the full student body, but the duties are every bit as important," Plummer said.

"It is a lot of responsibility, but it is very rewarding because of the things the Union is involved with, such as Broadway on Tour, the Carolina Concert series, and the Triangle Dance Company," he said.

Wayne Plummer

Applications are due Jan. 28. Applicants will be screened Feb. 1 by a group of members of the Union Board of Directors. The president-elect will be announced following the interviews.

The prospects of UNC capturing another national College Bowl championship have been heightened with the selection of the 1983 UNC College Bowl team.

Four of the five team members are former "Rude Boys" — the 1982 national championship College Bowl team.

Ron Black, a second-year graduate law major from Raleigh, Jon Wike, a graduate English major from Lexington, Seth Katz, a junior English and Slavic major from Raleigh, and Blair Haworth, a junior history major from Jamestown were all members of last year's championship team. Chad Russell, a junior from Hendersonville, has joined the familiar four in this year's team.

College Bowl is a question-and-answer trivia competition dealing with a variety of subjects.

The five-member team, which will attend the regional competition in Knoxville, Tenn., on Feb. 12 and 13, was chosen by the Carolina Union College Bowl committee after scrimmages between the eight-member All-Star team, said Julie Chiu, Union College Bowl coordinator.

The team — still nameless — will travel to the Charlotte Invitational Competition on Saturday, Jan. 22, Chiu said.

Twelve teams from around the state, including Davidson and North Carolina State University will compete, she said.

During halftime of the UNC vs. N.C.S.U. basketball game tonight, the UNC Athletic Department will present the 1982 championship "Rude Boys" with the College Bowl trophy, as well as the scholarship the University received as a result of their victory.

Reflecting on the upcoming year for College Bowl competition, team member Jon Wike said, "We lost a good player — Wynne Dough — last year, and the rest of us will really have to play hard. Other than that, I'm really happy about having the opportunity to be on the team again."

Students head for Great White North

Months of fund-raising activities — including selling Krispy Kreme doughnuts, sponsoring bands and tricycling around the Pit — are finally culminating for 39 UNC students today.

UNC participants in the Toronto Exchange will begin their 20-hour bus ride to Toronto this afternoon, said Phillip Timmons, a junior from Fayetteville and one of the group's three coordinators. He said a pistop at Niagara Falls was planned.

During the five days that Carolina Students will spend with students of the University of Toronto, they will attend a reception hosted by the Lt. Governor of Ontario, participate in seminars on Canadian politics, visit a brewery and possibly cross-country skiing, said coordinator Brian Cusack, a senior from Charlotte.

Exchange members were selected by the coordinators in early September. Since then, they have raised about $3,500, Cusack said.

The other half of the cultural exchange — the Canadians' visit to Chapel Hill — was not fulfilled this year, said coordinator Elisabeth Watson, an English major from Wilmington, Del., who graduated in December.

"They couldn't get enough people who had the $60 dues fee to cover the cost of the bus," Watson said. "The Canadian economy is so grim that a lot of people couldn't afford the dues. They also are spread over three or four campuses, so it's hard to get the group together."

In that respect, UNC is in a much better position, Watson said, because the exchange helped to unite a very diverse group of people on campus.

"For me, the best part of the exchange has been the people," said Alane Mason, a freshman from Tuxedo Park, N.Y. "I've made a lot of good friends that I might not have otherwise met," she said. "It's healthy to break out of the freshman mold."

Michael Halvey, a junior from Chapel Hill, agreed that the program had been a great experience.

"We learned how to pool our difference resources and skills to produce some very successful projects that were not only monetarily profitable but also enabled us to get to know each other better," he said.

The Toronto Exchange was established 24 years ago by UNC President William C. Friday and the president of the University of Toronto, Timmons said.

Watson said she was confident of the program's future. "The tradition is too strong and the exchange is too popular for it to collapse," she said.
