UNC to swim dual, tri-meets

By TRACY YOUNG
Staff Writer

For some reason that no one can quite pinpoint, the men's and women's swim teams are performing better now than they have at this point in the past several seasons.

Increased talent may be the key factor this weekend as both teams compete in what could be their toughest regular season meets. The men swim against Clemson on Saturday, while the women take to the pool against N.C. State and Texas on Sunday. The women also take on Clemson on Saturday.

Coach Frank Comfort couldn't find any specific reasons for his teams' strong swimming. He said it was some combination of raw talent, hard training and team unity.

"I think basically our talent's just stronger," Comfort said. "Everybody from the top to the bottom is functioning better as a team."

"I know we've worked more efficiently and more effectively, and that translates into having more talent," he said.

Co-captain Tim Sutton said that mental toughness has been a major factor in the past few weeks. This aspect of performing was stressed on the training trip to Florida.

The men's team is also practicing together now, rather than interspersed with the women. Sutton said this has helped the team become closer.

"It helps for us to be together," he said. "We can inspire each other as a team. We have a lot of confidence. I think that comes from mental toughness in practices."

Cami Berizzi, co-captain of the women's team, offered much the same explanation. She said her team helps each other work out and train. She also said that a good group of freshmen has helped the team.

To listen to Comfort and the captains speak, it sounds as if the Tar Heels should have a full

Gymnasts to host Duke in toughest test of the season

By FRANK KENNEDY
Staff Writer

North Carolina's gymnastics team doesn't have to win this weekend. "But," said head coach Derek Galvin, "it would be nice."

Galvin's highly ranked squad will face its toughest test of the season on Saturday when it hosts arch rival Duke.

The Tar Heels enter the meet with a 2-0 record and are steadily improving, but Duke will come into Fetzer Gym following its best team performance of the year in the Eastern Region.

The Blue Devils scored an impressive 172 points in their last outing, and figure to be the top-ranked team in the East when the next polls are released.

Galvin believes that alone will be enough incentive, if not the rivalry itself, to have his team emotionally ready.

"A win over a team like Duke will do wonders for our confidence," Galvin said. "We're already rather confident, but this would be a great boost."

"The Carolina-Duke rivalry is just as intense here as it is in all the other sports," said Galvin, who predicts that UNC will be ranked as high as third or fourth in the next regional polls. "A win would be nice, but our main priority is to have a good meet and increase our team score. Since the rankings aren't based on win-loss records, our average is most important."

The top seven teams from the region will qualify for the regional finals in March.

The Tar Heels have been on a steady, positive course since day one of the season. After posting a 169.05 in the first meet, the squad improved to a 169.15 last week against James Madison. It might take another such increase of two full points to get by Duke.

Such an improvement will not come easily. Although the bulk of the team's top talent will be healthy, two solid performers will not participate.

The most crucial of these losses came to Hollis Peterson, a strong bar performer, who will be out of the lineup indefinitely with a knee injury.

Karen Kaiser will be the Tar Heels' biggest threat. Kaiser won the all-around competition in both of the earlier meets.

Kaiser's toughest competition for the title this week will come from Duke's Leslie Williges, who, like Kaiser, is averaging 35 points per meet.

The Blue Devils have three gymnasts with 34-point averages, while UNC has only one 34-pointer, freshman Tammy Gilbert. Galvin hopes that his top women can give that little extra effort to counter the Duke advantage.

The meet is scheduled for 1 p.m. in Fetzer Gym C.

I would like to thank everyone who applied for the position of staff photographer at the DTH. I was very impressed with the work I saw. However, there is only one position to fill at the DTH. That position will be filled by James Francis, a junior journalism major from Lansing, N.C. But for those who did not make it, please keep checking the DTH for further announcements of staff openings.

There will be a photo staff meeting at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, Jan. 25, in the photo office. All staff photographers are invited to attend. If there are any conflicts, please stop by the office and leave me a note.
