The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, denying a scandal was brewing at the Environmental Protection Agency, named a replacement Thursday for Rita M. Lavelle and two other agency administrators he removed in the continuing shakeup at the EPA.

scandal: "The only one brewing is in the media that's talking about it."

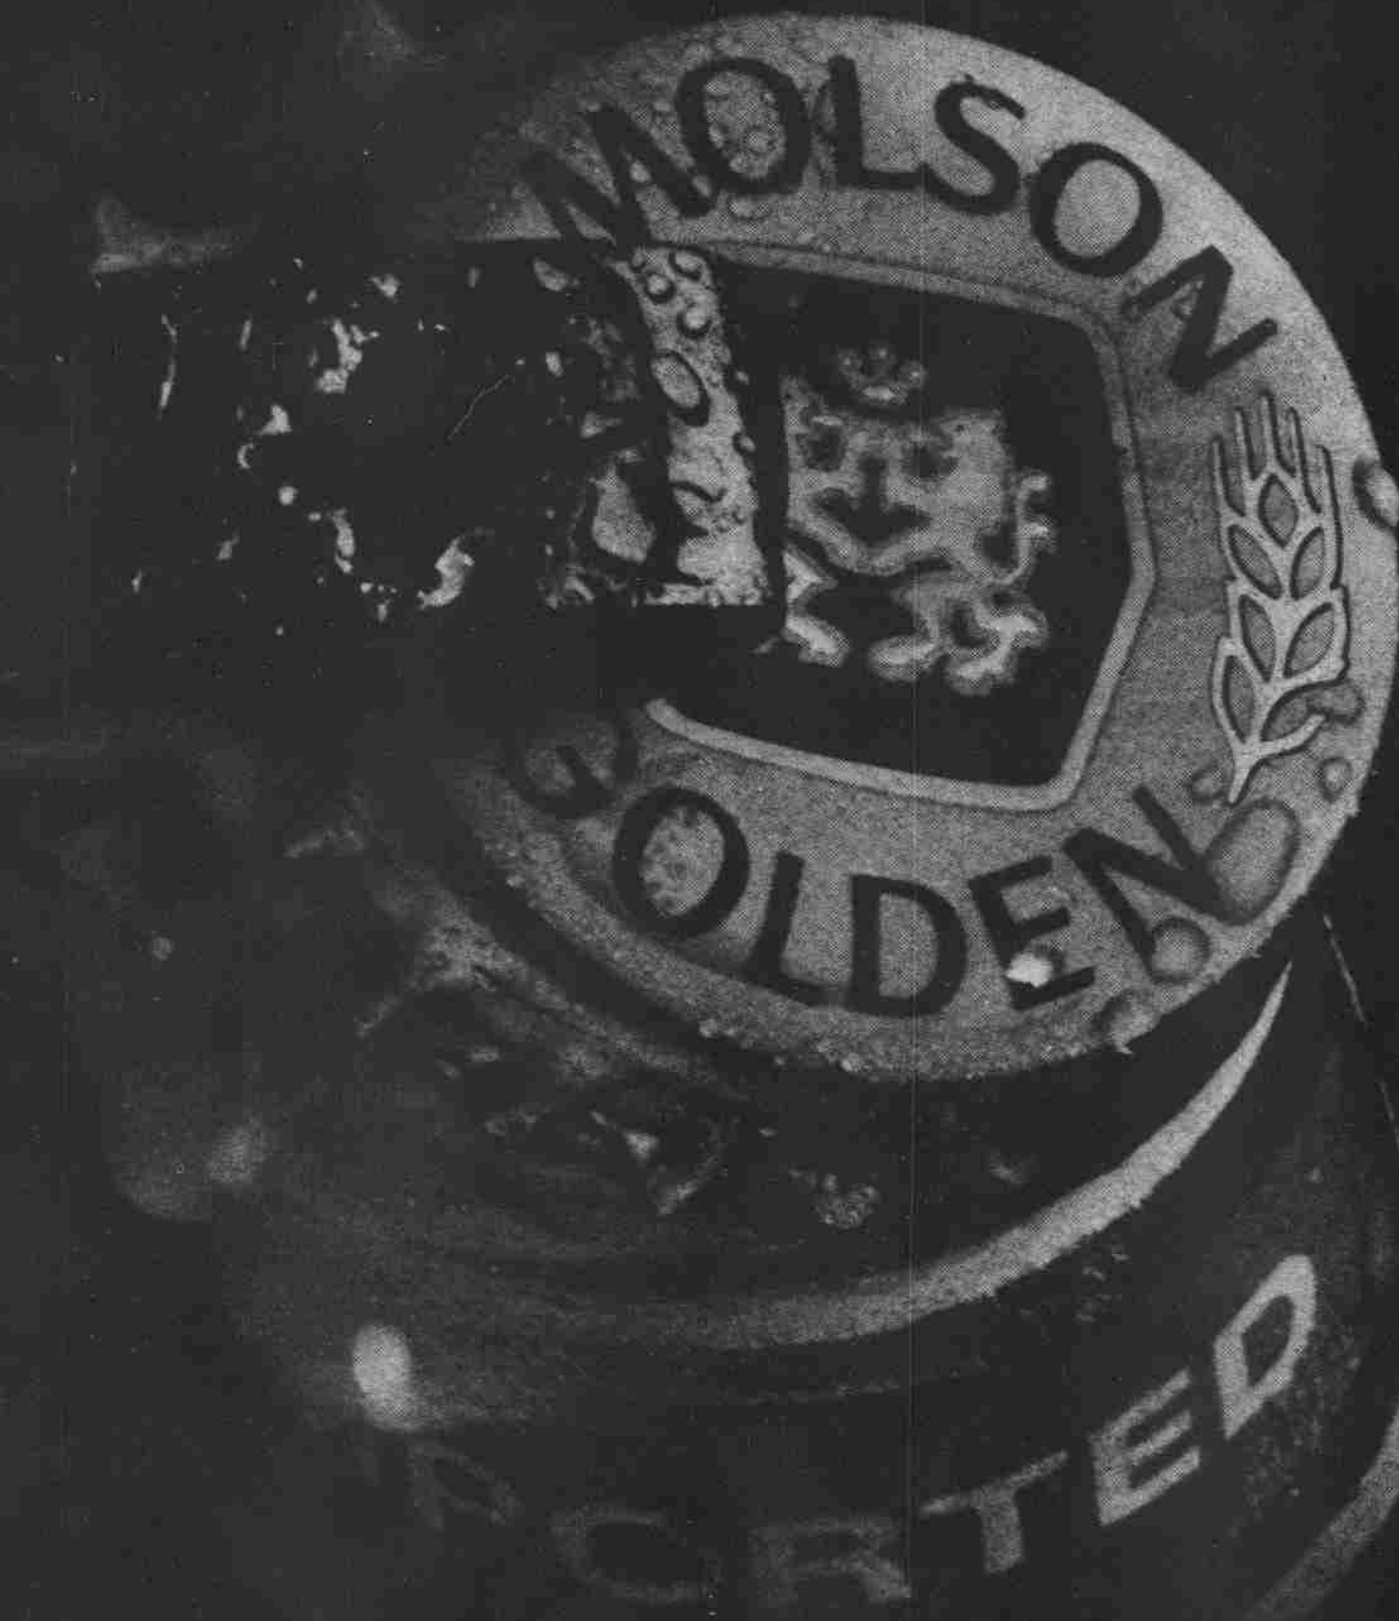

SAN FRANCISCO — Anne M. Burford, head of the embattled Environmental Protection Agency, said Thursday she had considered resigning because she might have become a political liability to President Reagan but decided not to.

The president, she said, had not asked for her resignation and continues to support her.

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker said Thursday that some interest rates charged by banks seem "quite high" in light of recent declines in inflation.

The best strategy, he said, is to reduce federal budget deficits and hold monetary growth in check, thereby reinforcing gains against inflation and assuring an economic climate in which rates would fall.
