

UNC must concentrate better

From staff and wire reports

North Carolina center Sam Perkins says the Tar Heels need to work on their concentration and ability to adapt to different situations as they enter the NCAA tournament.

"We're not concentrating enough," Perkins said at a news conference. "Everybody is not applying themselves like they should. We are going to need to do that going into the regionals."

"We really have to get psyched up and get prepared for any team we have to play," he said.

The No. 8 Tar Heels, 26-7, are the second seed in the East Regional and have an opening-round bye. On Saturday, they will take on the winner of Friday's James Madison-West Virginia game in Greensboro.

"Last year we were pretty set in everything," Perkins said. "This year we're young — well, not really young but we've got some inexperienced guys."

"They don't know what it (the NCAA) is like," he added. "Last year's team was more adaptable. But I think this year we have a good chance to get to the Final Four."

History disputes that. The Tar Heels have not won an NCAA tournament game after losing in the ACC Tournament.

"I don't think it follows that if you win the tournament you play great and if you don't win the tournament you aren't going to play great," North Carolina coach Dean Smith said. "I think so many factors are involved. I really think we'll bounce back and play pretty well."

The Tar Heels defeated James Madison 52-50 in last year's opening round, but haven't played West Virginia since 1966. James Madison is 19-10, West Virginia 23-7 and Smith said both could give the Tar Heels problems.

"There's a tremendous psychological advantage for the non-seeded team," he said. "They have a game under their belts and then they're made, especially if they think they deserved a seed."

The NCAA tournament marks the end of the 30-second clock and the three-point field goal for the Tar Heels. Smith said he doesn't anticipate any changes — except the mental aspect.

"All of a sudden when Michael Jordan pulls up on a jumper for a three-point basket, which he has done all year, I don't want that now," Smith said. "I want him to fake that jumper and take it to the basket."

Smith said James Madison could cause his team more adjustment troubles than West Virginia.

"We had a practice geared to a 26-24 full-court game," Smith said.

"And a lot has to do with mentally getting used to a slower tempo."

"If we play James Madison that would be very much of a problem. They want a 32-30 game. Then if you play West Virginia, I assume they still want a fast tempo."

Jordan said being chosen first-team All-America by The Associated Press Tuesday was an honor, but he wants more — three more national championships.

"It's a big thrill," he said in an interview before Tuesday's practice session. "You reach this high in your life to make All-American and you often think what you can do next year."

"This year's been great for me and it's going to be hard to top," Jordan said. "But I'm going to go out there next year and do the best that I can."

"For myself, I want a lot more," he said. "I want to win four national championships. I want to be the only one in my class to win four national championships in a row. That's something that can be done. It takes a lot of hard work, but it's a dream of mine. I just hope my dreams come true."

"I hope this year isn't over until April 5," said Jordan, referring to the date the NCAA title game is scheduled for.

Jordan came up with last-game heroics several times this year in helping Smith post his NCAA record 13th-straight 20-victory season.

"It's just a situation I'm put in," Jordan said of his last-second plays. "I just try to take advantage of it. I haven't lately been put in situations like that. I don't like being put in situations like that, but whenever I am I just try to do the best I can."

While he's drawn raves nationwide, Jordan says he still has room for improvement.

"I need to be more consistent," he said. "Sometimes I play well and then I'm not heard of for the next five or six minutes. I've just got to play a good 40-minute basketball game where I'm contributing all the time."

UNC center Brad Daugherty was released from the student infirmary Thursday and is expected to play in Saturday's game. He missed two days of practice, spending both Tuesday and Wednesday night in the infirmary with a "bad case of painful shin splints," team physician Dr. Joseph DeWalt said.

Daugherty is averaging 8.1 points and 5.1 rebounds per game for the Tar Heels. He had 17 points and a career-high 13 rebounds in UNC's overtime loss to N.C. State in the semifinals of the ACC Tournament.

Women face Georgia

North Carolina's women's basketball team travels to Athens, Ga., Saturday to meet eighth-ranked Georgia in the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

The Southeastern Conference champion Bulldogs are 24-6 on the season. After a first-round loss to Arizona State in last year's NCAA tournament, they're ready to prove themselves the surprise contenders for the Final Four that some have touted them as.

UNC, 22-7 and No. 18 in the nation, owns upset victories over highly ranked N.C. State and a tough Maryland team. The Tar Heels have hardly been mentioned as having a chance past the first round, but head coach Jennifer Alley said she believes her team can give the Bulldogs an excellent game if it returns from Spring Break ready to play.

The teams match up well. North Carolina can counter the Dogs' 6-3 Street and Smith All-American forward Janet Harris with the 6-2 tandem of Henrietta Walls and Tresa "Tree" Brown. And UNC's All-ACC performer Kathy Crawford will find herself even-up at 6-0 with Lisa O'Connor. Alley calls both Harris and O'Connor "super ballplayers."

In the backcourt, Georgia sports an excellent outside game anchored by the play of Teresa Edwards. The Tar Heels have two fine outside shooters and defensive players in Pam Hammond and Pam Leake. Both coaches have outstanding bench strength at guard, but Georgia will hold the edge if UNC has to go to its reserves in the frontcourt.

WXYC, 89.3 FM, will broadcast the play-by-play live from Athens, beginning at 7:20 p.m.
