

SPEAK EASY

A proposal is before the N.C. General Assembly now to raise the tuition for out-of-state students at all UNC schools by as much as $3,000 per year. What do you think of this proposal?

Kenneth Ward, junior RTVMP major, Enfield: "I think there should be some increase, but $3,000 is a lot of increase at one time, especially with the economic situation as is."

Melinda Lawrence, junior international studies major, Hickory: "Some increase will be good because the socioeconomic status has changed. I think you could still afford a $1,000-$2,000 increase. It's cheaper than most places."

Todd Anderson, sophomore accounting major, Memphis, Tenn.: "I think that it's a pretty big mistake. Most of our grad students are out-of-state. We have all of these high ranking grad programs, and we can't afford to lose out-of-state students. From the undergraduate perspective, you're just going to lose students who would stay here and later contribute to society here."

Teresa Ingle, freshman computer science major, Concord: "I think the University ought to have more in-state students than out-of-state students, and I see a lot of out-of-state students here."

Brad Knight, freshman computer science major, Columbus, Ohio: "Increasing out-of-state tuition isn't going to increase the revenue by that much because there are so few out-of-state students, and it will be even less because the students won't be coming back. I think that it's great that the in-state students only have to pay $700, but that they should raise theirs also."

Theresa Ngo, junior chemistry major, Coltsneck, N.J.: "I don't think it's fair. If they raise out-of-state they should raise in-state tuition in a proportional manner. I don't think they will continue to get the same quality of people."

GPSF plans to sponsor picnic

By JULIE HAACK
Staff Writer

The Graduate and Professional Student Federation is making plans to entertain older students this spring.

The federation is sponsoring a spring picnic, April 10, to help graduate students get away from Chapel Hill for awhile. The picnic will be at Storybrook Farm, about five miles from Chapel Hill, and will last from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m., said Chris Capel, newly-elected GPSF president and first-year law student. "The Bluegrass Experience" band will provide music. Beverages will also be provided, Capel said. Tickets for the picnic are available in the GPSF office in Suite D of the Carolina Union and from GPSF senators.

The GPSF is also busy allocating $10,000 received this year because of misallocation of student fee money in past years.

"We plan to do two significant things with this money," Capel said. A scholarship has been set up for graduate and professional students, he said.

"What we have done is to put the first $5,000 in an interest account, and the scholarship will be based on the interest that the money makes," Capel said.

The remaining $5,000 of the funds will go into a special projects fund to sponsor speakers for the graduate student body or to fund research that departments may not be able to fund for themselves, Capel said.

Any graduate or professional department may solicit funding for a special project with a presentation to the GPSF, but departments will be expected to match half of the sums that they request, he said.

The purpose of the federation is to facilitate communication between graduate and professional departments, Capel said. Social functions are one means by which the GPSF is going to encourage that, he said.

"We haven't really been consistent with our social functions, but now we're going to try to have one at least every semester," Capel said.

"It is also part of the GPSF's function to take a stand on the issues raised here on campus and affect them," Capel said. The GPSF supports the divestment of UNC holdings in South Africa, he said.

"We are also trying to get some more information about the increased tuition bills for out-of-state students, so we can formulate an opinion on that issue," he said.

The GPSF is now accepting applications for graduate representatives for the chancellor's committees, which are advisory groups made up of students, faculty and administrators. Applications for 14 positions are available in the GPSF office through Friday.
