

Student Activities Center moving along as planned

By JANET OLSEN
Staff Writer

Along Manning Drive behind Hinton James Residence Hall, the new Student Activities Center is beginning to rise from the depths of red clay.

But the birth of the center hasn't seen the death of the controversy over the location of student seating for basketball games.

Athletic Director John D. Swofford said the SAC Steering Committee has attempted to alleviate some student complaints over the proposed seating by reserving seating in one corner, equaling about one-third of the seating in the complex, exclusively for students.

Student sections previously were planned for two separate parts of the arena.

Swofford said the Steering Committee is studying other student complaints about SAC seating.

"Currently, students have asked for more side-court seating, and the committee is working to resolve the problem," he said.

About 8,500 student tickets will be issued per game in the SAC compared to the 3,600 issued per game in Carmichael Auditorium. The SAC will hold a total of 22,000 spectators.

Workers are currently building the seating structure and will begin putting up steel girders for the roof in about three weeks, Swofford said.

Completion of the SAC is set for February 1985. The SAC will cost an estimated $30 million, all of which will be raised through private donations. The Athletic Association and the Educational Foundation alumni organization are responsible for fund raising.

To date, $28.4 million has been pledged to the SAC building effort. Most of the money has come from Educational Foundation members, Swofford said.

"The Educational Foundation's involvement is primarily for fund raising," he said. "But they do have more involvement than normal because of the large scale of the fund-raising effort."

Contributors, who number more than 2,000, represent a variety of backgrounds, Swofford said.

"They range from people who are able to give a considerable amount in a lump sum to average working Americans to kids who love Carolina basketball," he said.

Along with the 22,000-seat arena, the SAC will include a 1,300-seat Olympic swimming center.

But Swofford said the primary need for the facility generated from the amount of interest in Carolina basketball and that basketball is the primary focus of the fund raising.

The SAC also will be used for free play and general recreation, including intramurals and physical education classes. It will contain the offices of the athletic director, the Educational Foundation, men's and women's basketball and swimming and ticket sales.

Once the SAC is completed, Carmichael Auditorium will continue to house non-revenue sports programs such as volleyball, fencing and gymnastics. The new facility will allow coaches and staff currently stuffed in closet-like offices in Carmichael to move into larger areas in the building.

The Student Activities Center is a progressive step for the University, Swofford said.

"It will be a facility that in one way or another benefit every student," Swofford said. "Regardless of their athletic involvement, students will get a lot out of it, recreationally, culturally and socially."

Her boyfriend's arrest has been "like a bad dream" for her, Stancell said, but she is confident he will be released. "I've got a lot of confidence in God, and I have a reason to believe things will work out," she said.

Judy Fisher, a UNC residence hall secretary who lives in Morrison, said she was stunned by Allison's arrest. "It's impossible to think that Danny could do anything like that. He was so friendly and so well-liked and well-known."

Fisher recalled a time when she and some friends ran out of gas late at night near Durham and Allison came to get them. "He would always go way out of his way for you," she said.

Larry Massenberg, Allison's roommate last spring in Hinton James, said Allison was "the best roommate I've ever had."

Mitchell said efforts were being pursued at Triangle Park Church of Christ to raise the bond money.

"Unless there's a split personality or a drug problem, this is an impossibility," he said.
