Gubernatorial candidate Edmisten visits UNC

By CINDY PARKER Staff Writer

An hour before his arrival, the posters were put up on trees and walls around the Pit. A film crew positioned microphones and cameras strategically around groups of students.

Shortly after noon, another Democratic gubernatorial hopeful began his campaign on the UNC campus.

One day after Tom Gilmore sat in on a political science class in Gardner Hall, Rufus Edmisten came to "find out what the students think," said David Collins, Edmisten's statewide college coordinator.

A 1963 UNC graduate with a degree in political science, Edmisten has served as the state's Attorney Gereral since 1974. His platform relies on his experience and knowledge in the political arena, Edmisten said.

For 45 minutes, the Democratic candidate shook hands with students and answered any questions they could fire at him. He kissed a few familiar faces in the crowd and chatted with passersby about their hometowns.

UNC students expressed their concern regarding a number of political issues. When asked how he would raise revenue for the state, Edmisten said that more attention should be directed toward collecting the millions of dollars in tax money which has not been paid. Our tax collection system is from "the horse-andbuggy days," he said.

This revenue could be used for purposes such as raising the salaries of teachers. "I was once a teacher," he said. "I'm not now. I couldn't afford it."

When a female student asked Edmisten about his stance on abortion he quickly replied, "That's your choice, not mine Men don't even have the right to talk about it."

On the subject of the increase in the drinking age, Edmisten pointed out that the decision was made by the General Assembly. He said anyone who is forced to fight for their country should have the same rights as anyone else.

He said the Safe Roads Act was "very tough" and said it will have disastrous effects for those drinking while driving. He said the act is about the strictest in the nation and advised students to get somebody to drive them, or walk, if they have been drinking.

When the conversation shifted to the subject of the downing of the Korean jet by the Soviets, Edmisten said that he would have insisted that all members of first Indian Heritage Week in 1980, N.C. Indians have had much to celebrate.

By LINDA OWEN

The Commission of Indian Affairs, which serves North Carolina's 65,000 American Indians, also began in 1980. The N.C. Indian population is the fifth largest in the country and the largest east of the Mississippi.

As the fourth annual Indian Heritage Week ends today, the agency, under the leadership of Bruce Jones, N.C. commission of Indian Affairs, has lined up numerous activities throughout all of North Carolina.

At the N.C. Museum of History in Raleigh, Roy Dickins, UNC professor of archeology, discussed Wednesday his summer with Indian archeological digs and studies in Chapel Hill, Chatham County and Orange County. Upcoming activities include a film Sept. 25 at 3 p.m. at the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources in Raleigh titled N.C. Indians 65,000 Strong.

The Cherokee Indian Fall Festival will be held from Oct. 3 to 8. Anyone going home to Favetteville on Oct. 7 or

Year-long activities may also include visits to the Charlotte Nature Museum, the N.C. Museum of Life and Science in Durham and Town Creek Indian Mount near Mt. Gilead.

Sally Migliore, a spokesperson for Jones, said the main purpose of the week's festivities was to give N.C. Indians the chance to come together and at the same time to enlighten the general public on issues in Indian society. The Commission of Indian Affairs works with five tribes and three urban associations in the state: Cherokee, Coharia, Haliwasapori, Lumbee and Waccamaw tribes, and the Cumberland County Association for Indian People, the Guilford Native American Association and the Metrolina (Charlotte area) Association.

The commission, along with these groups, attempts to maintain the tradition of Indian Heritage Week, Migliore said, by informing the public as well as serving the communities of North Carolina.

Student Health nurses have said they should be reclassified and given raises because their duties are similar to those of NCMH nurses. Without raises, Student Health will have a difficult time attracting quality nurses, Eiler said.
