North Carolina backfield Three's company for Tar Heels

By MICHAEL DeSISTI
Sports Editor

A tired but smiling Eddie Colson was asked after the 30-10 win over Wake Forest Saturday how it felt to be the other runner — once removed — in the North Carolina backfield.

"I wouldn't know," he said, with little visible reflection. The answer wasn't surprising, considering the fullback had just rushed for 119 yards on 13 carries and scored two touchdowns. But it became surprising upon considering the folks he was running with.

Colson was the second leading rusher in the game, and that by only three yards, with the first and third leading rushers having lined up just behind him in North Carolina's I-formation all afternoon.

The Tar Heels had three runners in triple digits for the first time ever Saturday as tailbacks Tyrone Anthony and Ethan Horton, in less than overshadowing but more than simply complementing Colson's performance, wheeled for 157 and 116 yards, respectively, with Horton winding up in the end zone twice.

"I don't really consider me another guy," Colson said. "No matter who's getting all the limelight during the game, it's all considered one group — 11 players."

Colson's 100-plus effort was his first in four years at North Carolina, and had the senior walking out of Kenan Stadium a firm believer in goal-oriented philosophy, as well as the prophetic vision of UNC offensive coordinator John Matsko.

Matsko had read an article quoting Colson as saying he wanted to run for 100 yards at least once before the season was through, and approached the fullback in practice.

"He (Matsko) said, 'You want 100 yards, huh?'" Colson said. "Well, we're going to work for that this week."

And you thought Nostradamus was something. Colson wasn't the only back to have some out-of-the-ordinary verbal interaction with the coaches last week. Horton, after starting the first five games of the season and having 585 yards to show for it, said he was told last Monday he wouldn't be on the first team for the Wake Forest game.

His replacement? Anthony, who had snapped to just days earlier against Georgia Tech after having run himself into obscurity most of the month before. The senior accumulated 91 yards on 11 carries and scored one touchdown against the Yellow Jackets.

Horton: "I didn't say anything to them (the coaches, after receiving the news). All the backs are really close, even more so off the field."

Anthony: "They (the coaches) didn't say who was starting, and I didn't ask any questions."

Anthony most likely didn't ask any questions because he didn't want any answers. That doesn't necessarily mean the senior was bitter about his playing time, or feeling slighted by his status relative to Horton. He'd been saying neither of these things were true all along.

What it probably means is that Anthony was content to consider the season as having started anew in Atlanta. If he could pick up 91 yards and score one touchdown without starting, that was fine with him.

"I got off to a sloppy start, and I'm more or less trying to catch up," Anthony said.

"I've always been told I was a cold-weather back. I guess the weather's getting cooler now."

After playing behind Kelvin Bryant in 1982-83, still picking up 705 yards, Anthony had been asked to start the current season on the sidelines as well, this time to make way for the junior Horton.

Anthony hasn't been one to complain. But getting just over half of Horton's carries and virtually none of his headlines — in what many thought would be Anthony's year — has had to hurt.

And so when Anthony shuffled off the field early in the second quarter Saturday to make way for Horton, after Anthony's 12-yard touchdown reception was called back for illegal motion and his 17-yard run had been nullified by a personal foul just three plays before, there was no smile. The head was down, the chin strap having been unstrapped with frustration.

With less than a minute to play in the third period, Horton knifed and knuckled for 20 yards and a 23-10 North Carolina lead — "The best run I've seen in a long time," head coach Dick Crum said. When Horton reached the sidelines after the run, there was a teammate waiting for a flying high-five, a slap on the helmet and a hug.

It was Anthony.

"We've got to realize that we have to help each other out," Anthony said. "Just because one's playing more than the other, that's not going to affect anything."

"Friendship should be everlasting."
Amen.

North Carolina's Tyrone Anthony (8) has Wake's Steve Lambert (81) falling for one of many moves which helped the tailback run for 157 yards in his first-start of the season.

In the third and fourth quarters, the Tar Heels simply muscled their way to three touchdowns, two by Colson and one by Horton.

Anthony got the Tar Heels moving from their 44 with another 14-yard carry. Then Colson did the rest, running around the right end 20 yards and, finally, catching a Stankavage pass inside the five and dragging a defender over the goal line with him for a 17-10 lead.

After UNC fumbled a punt return later in the quarter, the Deacons got to the UNC 25 and opted to pass up a field goal try on fourth-and-four, with Schofield trying to connect over the middle with one of his receivers, but strong safety Willie Harris deflected the pass to stop the drive.

After the change of possession, Horton took command, breaking away for a 23-yarder into Wake territory and capping off the long drive with a dazzling 20-yarder around left end for a 24-10 lead.

Later, Colson became the third back to top the 110-yard plateau when he ran the ball 44 yards in three plays to up the mark to 30-10 with nine minutes to play. (Barwick missed the extra point.)

Defensively for the Tar Heels, Bill Sheppard and Micah Moon each tallied nine solo tackles, and Sheppard was in on a total of 17. Harris soloed eight times, while Fuller had four solos and a 10-yard sack of Schofield.

Wake coach Al Groh said his respect for UNC was only increased by its performance. "They're the number three or four team in the country," he said. "It probably would have taken number two or three to beat them on a 60-minute span today. One thing that was very apparent to us was that nobody wins a scoring battle with them."
